– ARISTOPHANES

Every musician, every singer, every dancer and actor, whether performing solo or ensemble, is to be individually thanked. Thanked for dreaming of moments when they can stand before you to entertain, enlighten, and amuse. Thanked for their time sacrificed to hone their skills. Thanked for seeking the arts as their form of expression.

We're all better for their efforts. James V. Zizzi understands labors of love, and his homes stand before you as testament. Which is why James V. Zizzi Contracting is a proud supporter of the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center.

Boating Season

Three Trips Out, Three Escorts Back By The Authorities

By Dan Rattiner

So, how many times did you get out on your boat this summer? somebody asked me the other day.

I'm not much of a seaman. But this summer was the worst.

"Three times," I said. "And all three times I had to be accompanied back to the dock. Also, one other time, the boat got impounded, and I had to go to the impound area and drive it back. But that doesn't count."

This is such a sorry tale. It's pathetic. This person was not the first to ask me this question at the end of this summer. I now tell the sorry tale unprompted.

The first time I took the boat out was in early July. It is a used boat, a speedboat nineteen feet long, but it is new to me. So off we go, some friends and I, out from the dock in Three Mile Harbor to try it out. We are about two hundred yards from the boat slip, when the harbor police motors over in his launch.

"Your inspection sticker's expired," he says.

"I just bought the boat. This is just a practice run. Here. I'll show you the registration." I did.

"You have all your safety stuff there?" the officer asks. He pauses. "You can't go out without your safety stuff." He names some stuff. Flashlight. Lifejackets. Flares. With everything, the answer is no.

"Let's see the anchor."

I can't find it. I look in the stern hatch, in the bow, under all the seats. Everybody is opening and closing things. "It's around here somewhere," I say. I scratch my head. "It was in here when I bought it. The man showed it to me."

He escorts me, quite correctly, back to the dock.

The second time I took the boat out was in mid-July to go to the Boy's and Girls Harbor Bastille Day Fireworks celebration in Three Mile Harbor. It takes place on a Saturday night. About 2,000 boats go to see Grucci shoot off fireworks from a barge anchored in the harbor, for forty five minutes. So we went, six of us in this boat of mine, and after all the fireworks were set off and we were on the way back to the dock, all of a sudden the engine stopped. It's ten thirty at night. A thousand boats are heading south with us. So we start drifting, and we start waving at everybody.

"Help! Help!"

People wave back. "Wasn't it GREAT?"

"We are drifting over the edge of the earth. Help!"

Finally, somebody comes over and gives us a tow. A police boat comes by with searchlights and helps guide the way. Fortunately, of course,

This is becoming a MEDICAL emergency, an eye, ear, nose and throat emergency, so I have to do something.

CORRECTION

Last week, Dan's Papers incorrectly reported, in a real estate column, that the Poxabogue Golf Center was being sold. The club is not being sold. It is a Town of Southampton recreational facility now and this past summer, in its first year, turned a profit. We regret the error.

we now have all the safety gear on board. Even an anchor. And so, unceremoniously, we return slowly to the dock where I find there is already a boat in my boat slip. We tie up, temporarily, to a bulkhead on which there is a sign reading NO PARKING. We tape a note to the steering wheel. We go home.

The next day, I go out to where the boat is parked, note that my slip is now free and turn the key in the ignition. It still won't start. The engine turns over. But it won't catch. I have to have this repaired at the marina. I call them on my cell phone. They will tow me over.

The next day, I call the marina.

"You know the string with the magnet on the end that is on the dashboard?" they ask.

I'm not sure.

"The magnet end you attach to a second magnet on the dashboard. Then the string on the other end you clip to your clothing. If you fall overboard, the magnet comes loose, the engine stops."

"Oh THAT. Never use it."

"Well, you must have hit it with your knee when you were coming in. The magnet fell to the floor. Turned off the boat."

"That's what was wrong?"

"We reattached it. $75 for the tow. $75 for repair. Sorry. It's the minimum."

The third time I went out in the boat was two weeks later, which was about August first. Again there were six of us. We walked to the slip — the boat had been back in the slip for the two weeks — and it was a beautiful day and we motored up the channel to the water ski area. There's a five knot maximum. I went slow. But in the water ski area you can open it up. And so that is what I did.

"Hang on!" I say. I grit my teeth, and shove the accelerator to the max. We leap forward, and suddenly we are roaring off at forty knots in the one legal area you can do this in this harbor.

"Wheeeee!"

"Yahoo!"

We go around the water ski course once, a great thrill, and then I slow her down to a walk again for us to catch our breaths. Then off I go for a second spin around the course.

"Okay, okay, that's it!" somebody shouts.

"Okay, we go home."

From the water ski course to the dock is about half an hour at five knots. We'd gone out and it had been a half hour. Had our little thrill. An hour in all. Time to call it a day.

Just ten minutes along the route back toward the boat slip, quite suddenly, the boat began emitting this ear piercing screeching noise. It is an alarm of some sort. It goes on, it stays on. People cover their ears. It seems to be coming from the front. I bang on the dash board. But maybe it is in the back. I run to th stern and kick the engine. Still it screeches.

"Do something."

"I am doing something."

I got out my cell phone and call the marina The secretary answers. Everybody is out on call. She'll let them know and they'll call bac as soon as they get in. No, she had no idea wh the boat is screeching.

Everybody has their hands over their ear This, I think, is now an emergency. People ar going to lose their hearing if this goes on. I ca the Coast Guard. They ask if I am sinking o on fire. I say no. Just that there is this squeal ing noise. They say try calling another nearb marina.

This is just a little boat, nineteen feet long. I does not seem possible it is complicate enough to have an alarm. I bang my fist on th dashboard again. I try randomly pressing but tons and flipping switches.

Well, enough of that. This is becoming MEDICAL emergency, an eye, ear, nose an throat emergency, so I have to do something The something, I decide, is to speed up to te knots. We'll get back in less than ten minutes Illegal. But a solution I can surely explain to harbor policeman. I tap the accelerator, and w speed up to ten knots.

And in moments, a harbor police boat head over with his lights flashing. I look to see if it' the same guy I know from my first time out. I isn't. He pulls up ten feet away.

"Pull over!" he shouts over some loud speak

Washington Senators

Those Damn Yankees, Why Can't We Beat 'Em, He's Out, He's Safe

By Dan Rattiner

There is good news for composer Richard Adler, the longtime resident of Southampton. The Montreal Expos baseball team is moving back to Washington, D. C.

Adler is one half of the Broadway show team of Adler and Ross, who along with producer George Abbott, created the smash hit musical comedy called Damn Yankees. They also collaborated on Pajama Game another Broadway legend.

What's the connection? The plot of Damn Yankees is about a middle-aged character named Joe Boyd, a rabid baseball fan whose beloved team, the Washington Senators, every year loses out to the New York Yankees. The devil hears of this, and in a puff of smoke makes his appearance in front of Boyd and offers a bargain. He, the devil, will turn Joe into a 22-year-old rookie with Babe Ruth abilities. This rookie, Shoeless Joe Hardy, will appear at a Senators try-out, make the team, and squash New York. In exchange, at the end of his amazing rookie year, he will sell his soul to the devil and never see his wife and family again. The plot, and the songs in this show are, in fact wonderful. They include "You Gotta Have Heart," "Whatever Lola Wants, Lola Gets," "Those Were the Days," sung by the devil and dozens of other songs.

How this helps Adler is that, for many years, Damn Yankees, in all its revivals (most recently a two year Broadway run with Jerry Lewis as the devil), has had to live with the public having the idea that the Washington Senators was a made up name just to be used in the show. The truth is, however, that the Washington Senators were a real American league team, in business since 1859 (as the Nationals) and then 1901 (as the Senators), perennially in the cellar, and perennially humiliated every time they had to face the New York Yankees.

> Why baseball did not take in Montreal is a great mystery... they go crazy every year about the stupid game of hockey.

"Six months, out of every year," sings Joe's wife, standing behind a club chair upon which Joe sits, groaning and moaning at the television set, "I might as well be made of stone. Six months, out of every year, when I'm with him, I'm alone."

"You're blind ump, you're blind ump, you must be outta your mind, ump," Joe responds. "Those Damn Yankees, why can't we beat them."

"And the Washington Senators take over the place in his heart!" Joe's wife wails.

The Yankees had Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Joe DiMaggio, Tommy Henrich, Yogi Berra, Phil Rizutto, Mickey Mantle and Roger Maris. The Senators had, well, I can't think of one star. Nobody.

In 1961, after considerable negotiation, the Washington Senators moved west to Minnesota. Seven years after that, Montreal, which had just closed down their highly successful World's Fair known as Expo 67 were selected as an American League expansion team. They were named the Montreal Expos.

Why baseball did not take in Montreal is a great mystery. I mean, they go crazy every year about the stupid game of hockey. They have boring soccer games in the summertime, which nobody I know thinks are worth going to. Now they were given on a silver platter the all-American game of baseball. How could they not like what is surely the greatest sport ever invented by man? The Japanese like it.

But Canadians, the French-Canadians in Montreal anyway, just did not take to beezbahl. Attendance at Jarry Park Olympic Stadium slumped. And the Expos responded with an ever-declining level of play that some said reminded them of, well, the Washington Senators.

Ultimately, the owners went bankrupt. And after that, when nobody offered to step up to the plate to bring the team out of bankruptcy, Major League Baseball itself bought it. In this dubious situation where all the other teams together owned this one team in Canada, Montreal continued to play (and lose), in the hopes that by playing, maybe, sometime soon, new owners would be found for it. It took two years. And now, Montreal will return baseball to Washington.

There has been some talk that the team will retain the name "Expos," as in "the Washington Expos," but so far no decision has been made. Today, the ongoing rivalry with the New York Yankees involves the Boston Red Sox. Meanwhile, Baltimore has a new baseball team, which is called the Ravens. (After Baltimore resident Edgar Alan Poe — get it?) And so the new Washington team will have to settle for a rivalry with nearby Baltimore.

Up in Boston, and I was there recently, the local residents say that rather than having lost this year, they actually won. In direct competition with the Yankees, they managed to beat the Yankees more times than the Yankees beat them. So there.

It is a consolation, of course. The Yankees have once again won the pennant. And the Boston Red Sox, who apparently did not fare well with the other teams in the league, finished second, directly behind the Yankees, which is exactly where they have finished for the past seven years.

So Montreal is moving to Washington, and Damn Yankees will once again be credible. For the songs in the show, all that is really necessary is that the nickname have three syllables. Sen-a-tors was used in the original songs and never was called upon to rhyme with anything. Li-ber-ty would work. Pres-i-dents would work. Adler could change it.

The real question for Mr. Adler is whether he has any time for any of this. As this is written, he is in the middle of work on a Broadway revival of his other big hit, Pajama Game. He's written three new songs for it. He's hard at work on the project to make Damn Yankees, the movie, a Miramax project which should premiere starring Billy Crystal as the devil just about the time baseball returns to Washington.

But the best thing of all, I think, would be to give the new team the name of "Senators." Then the team could make a claim to more than sixty years of old Senator statistics — instant tradition —including the astonishing records of such ballplayers as Shirley Povich and Buster Narum and Shoeless Joe from Hannibal Mo, whose feats were absolutely astounding. And wasn't it a shame he played just that one year? • ers.

He has us hold up life jackets, flares, lights, horns, all other required safety devices. He checks my license and registration and all the time the boat is shrieking.

I try to explain why we had speeded up to ten knots.

"These people," I say pointing to everybody still with their hands over their ears, "uh, this is an EMERGENCY."

"Your engine is overheating," he says. "Do five knots. It will turn off by itself. I'll follow you in."

On the way in, at five knots, indeed, the alarm stops. But again, I decide I better bring it into the marina slip. They aren't going to repair it at my slip. The marine officer speaks again over his loudspeaker as he sees where I am going.

"You sure you can dock okay? If you need help, just let me know."

How embarrassing.

I tie up at the marina, and, still there was nobody at the marina to talk to, so we walk home. But I didn't have much to say. Because I was thinking that I knew what was wrong to cause the boat to overheat. Besides, everybody was deaf.

I had bought this boat in the late spring for $2,600 ("Dad is getting a crappy boat again," one of the kids said) and though it was old, I thought I could make sure I was getting a good one by asking Matt, at the marina, to go to where it was on a trailer at this person's house and have a look. Matt had returned with the news that it needed a water pump. He explained. The sea water is pumped around the engine by this fan with rubber blades inside the jacket around the engine, and the water cools it. But when a boat is not used for several years — and this one hadn't been — the rubber blades get stiff and sometimes break off. You have to replace the pump. I asked if this one was still circulating the water and he said it still did but it was iffy, so it would need a

The Race From Long Island To Paris And The Race To Space

By Dan Rattiner

In the summer of 1927, Charles Lindbergh, with just some sandwiches and water, bounced down a bumpy dirt runway here on Long Island, lifted off, and, for the next 33 hours, flew by himself across the Atlantic Ocean.

He was met by screaming crowds of adoring fans when he landed at Orly Field outside of Paris and he was swept up and carried off the field in great celebration. The next day, he received a check for $25,000, a great sum in those days. The amount was called the Orteig Prize, a contest offered by hotel owner Raymond Orteig, to be awarded to the first person who could fly an aircraft alone across the Atlantic, nonstop from New York to Paris.

This past Monday, just after dawn, a rocketship called SpaceShipOne, fastened to the underside of a high altitude aircraft called the White Knight, dropped down, had ignition and was flow by pilot Brian Binnie to a height of 377,591 feet above the Mojave Desert in California, briefly passing the boundary of outer space. Man, unsponsored by any government, has gone into space.

This story began six years ago in Dallas, when Anousheh and Amir Ansari, a wealthy Iranian woman and her brother-in-law, announced the X-Prize, $10 million to any private individual or businessman that could fly an aircraft into space and back, the same aircraft twice within fourteen days and before December 31, 2004. The Ansaris' pledge was backed by a guarantee, provided by the XL Capital Insurance Company. Premiums would have to paid during the seven years the offer was in effect. If, at the end of the seven years, no one claimed the prize, the offer would be withdrawn, but the insurer would keep the premiums.

> "It all went without a hitch," Rutan said. "We are very excited and hope to beat the deadline for the prize."

The announcement of this prize electrified the aerospace industry. And many people compared the X-Prize to the one that Lindbergh and others competed for nearly eighty years ago. Perhaps what Lindbergh did to connect America with Europe, particularly in the area of tourism, could happen between Earth with outer space.

There is a problem with this. On Earth, Paris is a fascinating, colorful foreign place totally different from America. And there are thousands of other foreign cultures to be visited and seen.

Outer space, on the other hand, is, for millions of miles, a whole lot of nothing, punctuated by large uninhabited planets featuring sand, rubble and an occasional chunk of ice or steam, depending upon the temperature.

With this contest, one could just go up into

nothing, experience weightlessness and either throw up or not throw up, look out a window and see the curvature of the Earth, and then come down. Welcome to outer space.

Early on, Las Vegas odds makers favored an entrant from Canada, known as the da Vinci Project. This involved a rocket, a 300-foot helium-filled balloon, a space capsule with jet engines and a parachute. But there were two dozen other entries, each backed by either enthusiasm, wild hopes and volunteers, or millions of dollars worth of research, engineering, construction and testing. And each project was very different from the others. There was the Canadian entry called the Canada Arrow — an actual rocket ship with numerous seats inside; another twenty-foot long space ship from Washington State called the Rubicon I; an entry from Texas called the Armadillo; another from California that looked like two mating aircraft. That was called SpaceShipOne.

It should be noted here that in Lindbergh's time, numerous other people tried to fly across the ocean to win the prize, too. And, of course, you never heard of them, because they failed. One of them was a dirigible flown from a large metal hangar on the edge of Fort Pond Bay in Montauk. The RF-1, after leaving Montauk, foundered off Newfoundland in a storm and crash landed in a rocky field there.

On June 21, 2004, the entry called SpaceShipOne, built by a west coast aircraft designer named Burt Rutan, held a successful test flight with pilot Mike Melvill at the controls. It came very close to the outer space region, without exceeding it, then successfully returned to earth. This project was backed by Microsoft billionaire Paul Allen, who reportedly spent more than twice the offered $10 million prize to create this entry.

"It all went without a hitch," Rutan said. "We are very excited and hope to beat the deadline for the prize."

On August 3, 2004, Armadillo Aerospace of Mesquite, Texas sent off their 19-foot-long rocket, Armadillo, on its first flight.

It was unmanned and just a test, but it was supposed to go up the full 328,429 feet, then parachute back to earth. Instead, it went up 600 feet, turned sideways, stalled and crashed, and broke into pieces in some tumbleweed not far from where it had taken off.

Armadillo had been a long shot entry. It was put together by John Carmack, the owner of id software which makes the video game Doom.

"$35,000 of rocket is now a whole lot of primo Armadillo Droppings," he said. "It's a good thing Doom 3 is selling very well."

On Saturday, August 14, 2004, the Canadian Arrow team held its first test over Lake Ontario not far from its London, Ontario headquarters.

For this test, a helicopter carried a crew capsule to a height of 9,000 feet above the lake, then dropped it. A few seconds after the drop, a parachute deployed, and the capsule floated for six minutes until it splashed down into the water, where it was retrieved by a launch. A crowd, attending the test, was jubilant.

Unfortunately, Canadian Arrow is going about their attempt in a slow and methodical way. They will be spending $5 million. According to Geoff Sheerin, the rocket's builder, future flights will test the crew capsule's emergency escape system, a booster rocket, a combined booster and crew capsule which will be deliberately aborted at 30,000 feet, and a high-altitude abort, which would reach space. All launches will be off a barge in one of the Great Lakes, which apparently is going to be Lake Huron. They are also building a new space center facility.

Back in America, another group called Space Transports set up camp in a private forest on the southern tip of the Olympic Peninsula in Washington State on September 7. Two days later, also before a huge crowd, engineers, volunteers and people from the community set up a 23-foot long rocket called Rubicon 1 with five booster rockets along the sides. Inside, there was a cockpit and a seat into which was strapped a crash test dummy — actually a barber shop dummy — which they packed in a cage with Styrofoam peanuts for protection. Off shore, there was a 52 foot fishing boat that would retrieve the rocket as it parachuted down from its expected height of six miles.

There was ignition, liftoff, and then, at just one hundred feet over the forest, a huge explosion, sending pieces of the cockpit, rocket and dummy everywhere. The engine came twirling and twisting down like a flaming baton. Pieces of rockets and crash test dummy scattered over the woods, and, after an hour, the head of the dummy washed up by itself on the beach. The fishing boat came in empty handed.

The founders of the company, Phillip Storm and Eric Meier, both 26, were downcast.

Storm said he thought there was a manufacturing flaw in one of the rockets. Before the blastoff, he said, one of them, seemed to have developed a bulge.

Racing At The Bridge

Antique Car Owners Hold Rally To Celebrate Bridgehampton's Heritage

By Dan Rattiner

Did you know that Bridgehampton used to be a mecca, like Lime Rock or Indianapolis, for auto racing? From 1915 to 1921, the local fire department sponsored street races as part of their summer carnival. The old Model T's and Stanley Steamers roared right down Main Street and along back roads, raising great clouds of dust. It was a terrific time.

Then, in 1949, street racing was revived along the back roads of Bridgehampton big time. After World War II, which had ended just four years earlier, many veterans who fought in Europe shipped to America sleek sports cars they bought overseas. These included Ferraris, Porsches, Austin Healeys, Triumphs, Peugots and others. Here locally, the vets decided to race their cars through the potato fields of Sagaponack and Bridgehampton, competing against one another just to have some fun. Anyone else who wanted to come and race was welcome, too.

The race circuit was set up down Ocean Road, across Bridge Lane, up Sagg Main and across Sagaponack Road to the starting point, a distance of about two miles. The cars went around and around, sometimes at speeds exceeding 100 miles an hour, and the spectators stood along the side of the road behind haybales as these cars rumbled by, or, even actually left the ground, sometimes sent airborne by the hump in the middle of the Bridge over Sag Pond, and by another hump on Sagaponack Road.

They held this event once a year. And it was very exciting and very dangerous. Finally, in the middle of the 1953 affair, a Porsche skidded off the road at high speed and crashed into the crowd on Sagaponack Road. A woman was killed, and the rest of the racing was immediately cancelled.

After this bloody incident, it was decided to build a big race track up in the woods north of Bridgehampton. The Bridgehampton Race Circuit opened in 1957 and for the next fifteen years, some of the most famous auto racers in the world raced here, including Bruce McLaren, Dan Gurney, Jackie Stewart, Sterling Moss and many others. But then the track fell into disrepair. And after that, finally, a few years ago, it was turned into a golf course known as The Bridge, named after the nickname of the old race circuit. It is a golf course today.

For the past twelve years, however, to honor this racing heritage, the townspeople of Bridgehampton hold what they call the 2004 Vintage Sports Car Road Rally and Tour, usually in the first week in October. It's a slow speed event, where antique cars follow a route, once again, through the back roads of Bridgehampton and Sagaponack, (now expanded to include Sag Harbor, Noyac, Southampton, Shinnecock and Hampton Bays). People walking or driving down the back roads of the East End on the Saturday afternoon are often astonished to see this great parade of old cars, the newest among them forty years old, chugging and wheezing along, on parade and involved in a time trial to get from here — which is the starting line in front of the Bridgehampton Historical Society to, three hours later, the finish line, which is also in front of the Bridgehampton Historical Society.

Interview, 2004

This reporter entered this year's event. I own a vintage 1959 Triumph TR-3, a bright red convertible car that has followed me around for most of my adult life. And so I decided it might be time to show it off. It runs well. Though I am not sure it can run for 120 miles without something going wrong. In any case, I entered, and I showed up at 10 a.m. on the morning of Saturday, October 2, with my navigator and friend, Eric Cohen, from Sag Harbor.

First of all, I would like to thank the police departments and fire departments and the townspeople of all the communities that we drove through. The cars in this great parade, and there were 47 of them this year, are exempt from the usual annual automotive inspections. They do get a cursory look — the authorities check to see they have four wheels on the ground and that the brakes and lights work — but there are no seatbelt requirements, muffler requirements, emissions requirements and so forth. In exchange, we get a HISTORICAL designation and agree to drive our cars no more than 3,000 miles a year. But all together, we are very loud, airplane loud, with occasional backfires and farts and so forth. Thank you all.

Some of the more amazing automobiles entered in this event included: Alan and Martha Patricof's yellow 1927 Franklin 11B Sportabout; John Hertzog's 1931 Ford Roadster with a rumble seat; Richard Lisman and Clive Doyle's 1936 LaGonde Rapide; Stanley Redlus' 1949 Packard Super 8 Victoria two-door convertible; and John Auerbach's Argentine Road Racing Car, a 1952 Lazzarino Barchetta.

The cars started off one at a time, stopping to be interviewed on an elevated wooden starting ramp by one of several television reporters from WVVH or reporter Liza De Guia from Plum TV. When it was our turn, I drove up the ramp, came to a halt at the top, and gave the usual speech about how I had bought the car from a tavern owner in Hampton Bays 36 years ago, how I'd been in various parades and so forth. I left out the part about how expensive it is keeping this beautiful object in trim all these years.

And so, we rumbled down the ramp and down School Street without a hitch. We had forgotten a map, and Eric was rustling around in this bag of stuff they had given us to see whether there was one in there. Meanwhile, we followed the car in front of us, which was a 1962 Sunbeam.

We circled the old street racing course once, then took off north up Sagaponack Road toward Sag Harbor.

Sometimes, when we rounded a turn, we could see the whole line of automobiles in front, and it just occurred to me how different they all were one from another. These cars are from the early days of the automobile, and people were experimenting with how they ought to look and how they ought to work. There were cars with spare tires on the rear trunk, cars with rumble seats that folded up and out from the trunk, cars shaped like bats, cars with leather belts wrapped around their hoods to keep them from flying open.

Two comments from Eric:

At one point he looked at the gauges on the dashboard, and then at me. He seemed worried. We had already gone about 10 miles. "Is the fuel gauge broken?" he asked.

Indeed, it pointed to zero. But it always has. Always will. Just doesn't work. But no, I assured him, I had plenty of gas in the tank.

At another point, he made a cell phone call. Just one, he said, then it would be back to navigating. He was calling a client. "This is Eric," he said. "How are the computers working?"

Very well, it seemed.

There really is no point in telling you who won this event. However, I will tell you that the first 33 cars in the parade were involved in time trials. After the first ten miles, these 33 cars peeled away from the rest of us and headed out on a whole separate course. They would be passing checkpoints, which they were supposed to pass exactly at a certain time. The time they did pass would be noted, and the accuracy of their ability to make these time checks evaluated at the end. The ones posting the most accurate times would be declared the winners. (Richard Weintraub, in a 1955 MG TF, won.)

As for the rest of us, we rumbled and popped along, admiring the landscape, much of which consisted of the narrow country roads these cars were originally built for. Coming down Stony Hill Road, however, the needles on the gauges on my car began to indicate a low oil pressure. There also was developing, and every minute getting louder, a loud, rhythmic, jingling noise from the right rear wheel, perhaps a cracked wheel bearing. We limped along.

As we approached Scuttlehole Road, where Eric indicated we would have to turn right, I indicated that he should turn around in his seat and gesture to the people in the car behind us to turn right, because we were turning left. We got to the corner. Car 45, a red 1960 Austin Healey being driven by Ken Dressler, pulled up alongside.

"We're bailing out," Eric shouted.

"Okay," Dressler said.

And so we limped home.

Those Tapes

More Revelations As The Pelosi Trial Is Postponed A Week

By David Stoll

Although a jury was selected nearly two weeks ago to hear the murder charges against Daniel Pelosi, opening statements will not begin until next week, as prosecution and defense lawyers argue over statements by prison inmates claiming that Pelosi made incriminating statements, many of which are apparently captured on tape. As of press time, the tapes themselves have not been released, but some of the contents of the tapes, as described by prosecutors familiar with them and prison inmates, are becoming public knowledge.

Pelosi, an electrician from Manorville, has been accused of bludgeoning billionaire financier and philanthropist R. Theodore Ammon to death in his East Hampton Middle Lane estate three years ago this month. After a lengthy police investigation, Pelosi was charged in March of this year with the murder. The revelation about the prison tapes is only the latest chapter in a very strange story.

Ammon was killed next to his bed at night, with no evidence of a break-in. Nothing was stolen. At the time, he and his wife, Generosa, were in the midst of a bitter divorce and custody battle over their adopted children (twins from the Ukraine), although there were reports that a settlement was very close. Meanwhile, Generosa was living with Pelosi, the electrician who installed a nine-camera security system in the East Hampton estate. The system, which was installed at Generosa's request so she could see whether Ammon was unfaithful, had been turned off on the night of the murder. Just three months after the murder, in January 2002, Pelosi and Generosa Ammon married, and they moved to London.

Pelosi owns a stun gun, but claims he never used it. He says he bought it to get rid of raccoons.

Later during that year, Pelosi — who has had numerous brushes with the law — returned to Long Island to face charges for driving under the influence of alcohol. He pleaded guilty and, in January 2003, was sentenced to a year in jail. After his release from jail, Pelosi was charged with stealing more than $40,000 worth of electricity from LIPA. Also, Generosa and Pelosi separated, and Pelosi signed a postnuptial agreement to take a $2 million payment in exchange for being cut from her will. She died from cancer in August 2003; the bulk of the Ammon estate was left to the children, in trusts.

Throughout this time, the investigation into the death continued with particular focus on a laptop used to access the Ammon security system. The laptop had been used during the weekend of the murder, and was in the possession of one of Pelosi's sisters. A grand jury was convened to consider the case, and heard evidence over an eight month period. While grand jury proceedings are secret, it is known that the nanny who cared for the children testified that Pelosi admitted to the murder, and described it, when he was drunk one night, although some of the details were at odds with police reports.

In addition, Ammon's autopsy revealed that he had been shot with a stun gun before he was killed. Pelosi owns a stun gun, but claims he never used it. He says he bought it to get rid of raccoons. When he bought it — ten months before Ammon's death — he was already involved with Generosa. Pelosi's attorney had forensic tests conducted on the gun, in the hope that the tests would prove that it was not used, but those tests were inconclusive.

Pelosi was indicted in March 2004, and bail was denied. His lawyers asserted that he is innocent and that evidence against him is of questionable credibility, in light of police tactics. They claimed that the length of the investigation undermines the prosecution's case. Then, in June, they filed notice with the Court that Pelosi would have an alibi. The notice contended that Pelosi came to Long Island on the weekend of the murder to attend a Hamptons wedding on Sunday, but that he never made it farther east than his sister's house in Center Moriches.

When the laborious process of jury selection began, Pelosi's lawyers filed a motion seeking to bar testimony from the prosecution's expert witness, who will testify that a stun gun was used as part of the murder. Prosecution attorneys then asked for a delay in jury selection, so that they could respond to the motion. When it appeared that the judge would agree to a short delay, Pelosi's attorneys withdrew the motion. To make sure that Pelosi agreed with the withdrawal of the motion, Judge Doyle called him to the stand, under oath, and asked him. Pelosi testified that he did not want any delay in the case. His lawyers will try to attack the credibility of the prosecution's expert witnesses during the trial.

The case took another strange turn last month, when prosecution attorneys revealed that Ammon had called a Bridgehampton friend at 9:45 on the night of the murder from his cell phone. He did not reach his friend, but left a message that he had taken a walk on the beach and was going home because he was concerned about some of the men on the beach and thought the beach might be a gay beach. It is not clear whether he feared for his safety or was merely disturbed by what he may have seen on the beach. Pelosi is likely to use this tape in his defense, resurrecting rumors that Ammon was bi-sexual and contending that he may have been killed by a random pick-up. Ammon's family has long denied that he was bi-sexual.

Just less than two weeks ago, the difficult process of jury selection was completed, with nine women and three men being sworn in. The selection process took a long time because years of publicity have caused many people to form beliefs about the case, and because some potential jurors know some of the many people who are part of the story. One juror then dropped out because of anxiety over the case, and one of two alternates took her place. Opening statements were supposed to have begun late last week. But then came the tapes.

On Wednesday, September 29, lead prosecutor Janet Albertson told the judge, outside of the presence of the jury, that she had learned that Pelosi had been recorded by an inmate. Although she said she had not yet heard the tapes, which contain over 40 hours of conversations, another prosecutor told her that Ammon made "direct admissions" of the murder, and threatened harm to jurors and even Albertson's children. She said that she would call prison inmates as witnesses. Pelosi's lawyer, Gerald Shargel, contended that the tapes were not admissible and that the prosecution sprung this information at the last minute as a delay tactic — a charge prosecutors deny. Judge Doyle postponed opening statements until Monday, October 4, so he could consider the matter.

On Monday, October 4, Judge Doyle postponed opening statements for another week, to October 12, after Pelosi's attorneys asked to have the tapes suppressed. Prosecutors agree that the tapes cannot be played to the jury, but they argue that the inmates with whom Pelosi spoke can be called as witnesses. Several current and former inmates are now on the prosecution's witness list. Moreover, if the defense plays any part of the tapes during the trial, the prosecutors would likely be allowed to play the remainder.

Written statements by two inmates about what Pelosi said to them are now part of the record. According to one inmate, Pelosi said that trial witnesses called against him are "dead meat" and there would be a "bloodbath"

Author Mason Locke Weems

Selling George

Author Makes Up Story Of President Washington As He Goes Along

By Jerry Cimisi

As the Hamptons, and in particular East Hampton, prepares for the Hamptons International Film Festival, one might note a curious entertainment that hit the East End some centuries ago. (Curious to us now, perhaps, but not so then.)

One autumn day in 1799 a preacher turned traveling bookseller, Mason Locke Weems, began to draw a crowd on Main Street in East Hampton. A natural storyteller, violinist and astute salesman, Weems was in the process of drumming up buyers for his soon-to-be-published life of George Washington. He took a spot under one of East Hampton's stately trees, burnished with the colors of the season, and began to exhort passersby.

Perhaps his name is little known to the public now, but Weems, born on October 11, 1759 in Maryland, influenced early American bookselling as well as our perceptions and myths about President Washington. It would be Weems who first wrote the almost certainly fabricated tale about young George chopping down the cherry tree and then admitting to his father the deed with the famous line, "I cannot tell a lie."

By that fall of 1799, Weems was already practiced in traveling about to sell books. He had crisscrossed much of the south, selling subscriptions of a previous biography of Washington, written by Chief Justice John Marshall and another justice, Bushrod Washington, the president's nephew.

If Weems were an accomplished violinist, he also made use of a drum on such occasions as when trying to attract the attention of the villagers of East Hampton. He pounded on the drum with resolve so that his presence might be known around town, and the curious would come to investigate.

Today he might have been a standup comic, or, well, run for office.

In his Book Business, Publishing Past Present and Future, Jason Epstein, a Sag Harbor resident and longtime editor at Random House, mentioned Weems' foray into East Hampton. It is an intriguing slice of early American life that prompted further research.

There were no bookstores and no booksellers in East Hampton in those last years of the eighteenth century. This was not an uncommon situation. In those days, and for a long time prior, writers published their books themselves, and became salesmen to sell them. So Weems would be author, publisher and middleman. It is not known just how many subscribers he secured for his forthcoming life of Washington, but it turned out to be a hugely successful book, going through many editions. The first edition came out in 1800; The Life and Memorable Actions of George Washington. It was in an edition six years later that Weems added the tale about the cherry tree. There was also the story about young George throwing a dollar across the Rappahannock.

Weems' mythmaking was not unremarked upon, even then. A reviewer of one of his early editions of Washington's life said, "The reverend author of this book before us, which we are at a loss whether to denominate a biography, or a novel, founded on fact, has presented a specimen of writing, which for variety and oddity is almost unique in the annals of literature."

Some accounts say that Weems went to England as a young man to study medicine, and may have been a surgeon in the Royal Navy at the time the Revolutionary War broke out. He was ordained into the ministry by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Returning home, the urgencies of supporting his family forced him into the bookselling (and writing) business — though he continued to call himself "Parson." Prior to peddling his own work, Weems had hooked up with a Philadelphia printer named John Ormrod who also sold books on the road. Justices Marshall and Washington had published the life of the latter's uncle through a publisher in Richmond, who in turn had hired Ormrod and Weems to drum up (often literally) business.

In this endeavor, Weems had had the south to cover, Ormrod the north. Weems had to suffer the more unfavorable territory. Echoing — or rather establishing — a position that would be much contested in later generations (particularly during the Civil Rights era of the mid 20th century), the southern states looked more to their own governance than to a central federal authority. After all, had they not just fought against England to earn that very right?

Weems was certainly a colorful character (perhaps his life might be amusingly profiled in a future film festival entry). One account has him "traveling throughout the south, with his books in his saddlebags, equally ready for a stump, fair, or pulpit." If Weems were primarily a bookseller now, he would not pass up a sermon. In fact, he had written a temperance pamphlet (later expanded and published as The Drunkard's Looking Glass) that he would sell, in of all places, taverns. He would enter these establishments and with hilarious acuity, mimic the manner of a drunk, amusing the patrons so much they would buy a tract that warned against the very habit they loved.

Weems apparently liked to have fun. He would use his talent with the violin at dances across the country, sometimes scandalizing the more Puritan communities. And once — at least according to Weems — his violin playing saved his goods and perhaps even his life. Somewhere on his many journeys, Weems' horse became caught in a quagmire. Just as Weems and his mount were getting free, some unsavory characters appeared, the type who preyed on travelers. But Weems so delighted them with his acuity of his violin playing that the highwaymen let him go on his way, unmolested.

Throughout his life, you get the image of Weems always playing to the crowd. Today he might have been a standup comic, or, well, run for office.

Weems would also write biographies of Francis Marion (a Revolutionary War hero known as "The Swamp Fox"), Benjamin Franklin and William Penn. In continuing in the vein he had used his Washington biography, Weems used in his narratives incidents that were hardly provable. In a book called Old Families and Old Churches in Virginia, Bishop William Meade said of Weems' work: "You know not what to believe of the narrator...." Though he conceded there were "passages of deep pathos and great eloquence."

Another critic may have put it more precisely: "He had the desire to please more strongly than the desire to preach...there is the touch of the confidence man in him."

And "please" Weems did. Throughout the 1800s, Weems' life of Washington was the second bestselling book next to the Bible. (One has the image of a young Abe Lincoln reading it by the light of the fireplace.) It was continuously in print until 1927. The story of truthful George became ingrained in the national psyche. "I cannot tell a lie," was the ironic motto of leaders who often did just that.

At one time Weems settled in Dumfries,

"We thought it was going to work well anyway," he said. "We have to find out what happened and fix it."

Four weeks later, the da Vinci project, backed by $5 million in investments, hoped to hold their attempt. Headed up by an entrepreneur named Brian Feeney, the majority of the money, $3 million, had been provided by Golden Palace.com, a gambling firm that sometimes advertises its website in black greasepaint on the backs of prize fighters scheduled for nationally televised bouts.

This was a hurry up decision. Da Vinci had learned that SpaceShipOne was going to attempt their try for the prize on September 29. And so, they tried to beat it. After a great amount of scurrying around at their headquarters in Toronto, they announced that they would make their first try on October 2, in a field in the Saskatchewan city of Kindersley. The odds-makers, as I mentioned before, had high hopes for this entry.

The reason was the simplicity of it. It consisted of a 300-foot tall helium balloon above a large 20 foot diameter rocket ship with a parachute on the top. The balloon would go up to thirty five thousand feet, then release the rocket ship. Inside, the president, founder and fundraiser of da Vinci, Brian Feeney would power five rockets on the sides, detach from the balloon and shoot up into space. Then a parachute would float it back to Earth.

On September 28, however, there was an announcement. The da Vinci Project was being postponed.

"What it comes down to," said Feeney, "is that there is a lack of multi-axis filament winders in Canada at this time. And we have to import some more."

The new launch date will be in late October or November.

Thus the field had cleared the way for the attempt by Burt Rutan's Scaled Composites company, which had built, to his design, what looked, to those seeing it for the first time, like two small, white, graceful birds, mating. There had been the successful test in late June. Now, at a launch site in California's Mojave Desert, 62-year-old test pilot, Mike Melvill, would make two attempts at the same location, one on September 29 and the other on October 4.

The idea was that the larger of the two attached crafts, a twin hulled airplane called the White Knight, would carry the smaller aircraft, a rocket plane, SpaceCraftOne, to about 47,000 feet, then drop it. As it did, Melvill would fire the rocket and then zoom up to the required height, remain just above that height for thirty seconds, and then fold up the rocket's wings for a long coast back down through the atmosphere to Earth.

Two days before September 29, and one day before the da Vinci postponement, Rutan received wonderful news. The owner of Virgin Airways, Sir Richard Branson, announced the creation of a new company called Virgin Galactic, which would offer rides into space, on a craft based on the design of Burt Rutan. The charge would be $190,000 a ticket, which would include not only a three hour flight, but two days of training prior to it. During the flight, ticket holders would experience weightlessness for about four minutes, views of the Earth showing the curvature, and, if possible, a cocktail. The trips into space would begin in 2007.

And so arrived September 29. Early that morning, out on the Mojave Desert, the first of the two required attempts took place. The twin aircraft took off uneventfully, separated at 46,000 feet, and with the rockets successfully fired, SpaceShipOne began climbing, up to 80,000 and then 100,000 and then 120,000 feet, at which time it became unstable and began spinning and rolling. From a blockhouse by the runway, Rutan called his pilot and told him to abort the mission by turning off the rocket engines, but the pilot said no, he could handle it, and he would proceed.

Through binoculars, observers were able to see SpaceShipOne roll 29 full circles on its way up before disappearing out of sight. But high in the stratosphere, SpaceShipOne passed into outer space, leveled off, then folded up its wings and glided down. It made a perfect landing on a runway in the Mojave, just a mile out from the starting point. As the landing crew rushed to where he was, Melvill climbed out and up onto the top of the rocket plane and began waving his arms in triumph. One down, one to go.

The night before the final attempt, on Monday, October 4, Rutan announced that the second attempt would be made by Brian Binnie, the backup pilot. There was no explanation for the change, but the fact was that Melvill, though successful, had ignored an order to abort the mission halfway up.

Rutan had examined both the White Knight and SpaceShipOne and had found no stress damage to either of them. He also felt he had located the cause of the 29 rolls that SpaceShipOne had taken on the way up. He even published his findings on the Internet.

And so, at dawn on Tuesday, with Binnie at the wheel, the White Knight took off and carried SpaceShipOne up to 45,000 feet, dropped it, and Binnie took off. The rocket on the back of SpaceShipOne burned for 84 seconds, SpaceShipOne rolled exactly once, reached its peak altitude and then floated back to earth to make a beautiful landing on the Mojave Desert runway. Everyone was jubilant.

"There is a freedom up there, a sense of wonder. I tell you what, that you all need to experience," said Binnie.

"I have a hell of a lot bigger goal now than NASA," Rutan said, referring to the pledge he had gotten from Virgin Galactica.

The final say, perhaps, came from Peter Diamandis, co- founder of the X Prize Foundation.

"You have raised a tide that will bring billions of dollars into the industry and fund other teams to compete. Today we begin a new era of spaceflight."

We are off to visit the rubble of space and nothing will ever be the same. •

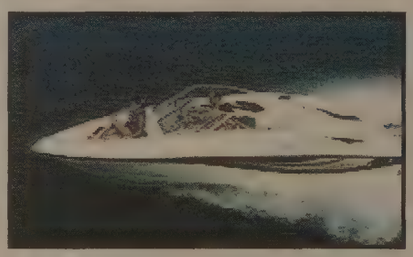
pump. I said if the old pump works, leave it alone. He said okay.

So it was the pump.

I called the marina a few days later. This was now about August 18. The pump, he said, has been ordered. Should be in tomorrow.

On August 22, having not heard from Matt, I drove over to the marina and there was the boat, on a metal stand, directly in front of the front door entrance to the place. 150 boats. And one by the front door. I went inside.



"The bolts holding the engine together are frozen," Matt said. "We have the pump. We have ways of loosening bolts, but they haven't worked. There's this guy who comes around to all the marinas once a week and he has special tools. He should be here early next week."

My boat, on its stand, was at eye level. "I think this is a good time to put the new name on the side of the boat," I said. "I'll use those plastic letters you have back of the counter."

Much easier to put the name on it when it is out of the water. Otherwise you have to lean over the side and put them on upside down. And maybe you fall in anyway.

Later, I took my girlfriend over to see the boat in front of the front door to the marina.

"This is very special," I said, showing her her name on the side.

She was beside herself with glee. "When's the last time you had a boat named for you?" I asked.

I also decided, on this second trip to the marina, to put the new registration numbers on the side of the boat. The reason for this was simple. I had bought the boat and gotten title and registration, and was assigned new numbers. And I had done nothing about it.

The day before the Boy's and Girls Harbor Bastille Day Fireworks, I had gone down to my boat slip — I had waited four years to get this boat slip — and my boat wasn't there. I walked up and down the floating dock. No boat. Somebody had taken my boat. I had put it in the slip the week before. Now it was gone. I called the police, they suggested I call the marina where I keep it.

"What IS in your slip?" Matt asked. "Anything?"

"There's a boat belonging to the East Hampton Harbor Master's Service."

"Call the East Hampton Harbor Master," he said.

Turned out I had mistakenly put the boat in the slip next to my slip when the boating season had started three months earlier. I was the first boat in. I can see my boat from the house and it is nice to be able to point it out.

"There it is. My boat."

But because the lines and pilings were a little different than the year before, there were no numbers and no one else was there, I couldn't remember exactly which slip was the right one. So I had guessed.

What had happened was the person with the other slip had soon come down to put his boat in and called the harbor police to say there was a strange boat in his slip. The police came down, checked the slip numbers (everyone waits four years), checked the numbers on the side of the offending boat (which I had not changed) and found it belonged to somebody in Mt. Sinai, New York. So they impounded the boat, and towed it across the harbor to the East Hampton Public Dock where they tied it up in front of the Boatyard Museum.

I went there, showed them my registration, and straightened it out. It was my boat. Just hadn't changed the numbers.

"Are you planning to take this boat anywhere?"

"Like where?"

"Greenport. Connecticut. Shelter Island."

"No."

"Well, if you just keep it around here, don't worry about it. Now we know it's yours."

So while it was out of the water, I not only put my girlfriend's name on the side, I changed the numbers. Everything all neat and tidy. I'm ready to roll.

On Labor Day weekend, Matt called to tell me my boat was ready with the new water pump and come and get it, they've got it in a slip at the marina.

But, honestly, I was just too busy. Big Labor Day newspaper to get out. Horse Show to cover. Fundraisers to go to. Five days later, a sun-

Red Herring, the hilarious film noir spoof at Guild Hall's John Drew Theatre in East Hampton, is called "Mel Brooksian" in style. The king of Comedy himself, Mel Brooks and wife Anne Bancroft were in the audience Saturday night. He later told Director Michael Nathanson the play is "funny, funny, funny and my wife has been quoting lines from it all night." Then he told actress Ali Squitieri "next stop Broadway." Dan's Papers is a sponsor for Red Herring.

Designer Steven Stolman, who is so well known in the Hamptons, dined with his friend Scott Durkin, COO of The Corcoran Group, at Fred's (in Barney's) in NYC. Both were intrigued by the shrimp dish which Jonathan Tisch, Chairman and CEO of Loew's, was having at a nearby table. Scott and Steve told the waiter that they wanted the same dish which, as it turns out, isn't on the menu. The special shrimp salad was served up to Scott and Steve, too. Scott has been spending much time in the Hamptons as a result of Corcoran opening branches here, and underwriting the Charles Busch musical "Auntie Mame" at Sag Harbor's Bay Street Theatre, and Lypsinka at Guild Hall.

ny day but with a little chill in the air, I drove over to the marina with plans to take the boat out one last time. There was this story I wanted to write on my laptop computer. Usually, I'd go to the beach to write, but this time I thought I'd get in my boat, motor out, drop anchor, and write sitting in a deck chair on board. But at the marina, my boat was not to be found.

"We thought you were done for the season," Matt said. "We needed the slip for other boats. We've started hauling. So we took your boat out of the water. We'd take it down for you and put it in the water if you want to go out."

I thought about it. It meant using a fork lift.

"Naah," I said. "But thanks." And I drove off to go to the beach.

So that's been my boating season. •

because "I have someone working on it right now." The other inmate claims Pelosi told him that Pelosi's attorneys would pay the inmate "$100 per tooth" for each tooth he knocked out of any inmates who are working with the prosecution. Most importantly, the inmate claims that Pelosi admitted "that he killed the man by beating him with a bat and that he broke his fingers and knees and other bones besides his head." Pelosi is also said to have remarked, "if I had known what I know today I would have just shot him." Pelosi apparently did not mention Ammon's name.

Judge Doyle will decide whether to allow any of the inmates to testify. Once the decision is made, lawyers for both sides can tailor the opening arguments accordingly. The trial is expected to last several weeks.

RICHARD AVEDON, 1923-2004

Richard Avedon, the photographer who revolutionized the field of fashion photography, died last Saturday, October 2, at the age of 81. The cause of death was complications following a cerebral hemorrhage he suffered while on assignment in San Antonio, Texas. He was working on a portfolio for The New Yorker called "Democracy," which is an election-year project due out before November.

Mr. Avedon was known for his ability to capture his subjects in a dramatic, creative, and honest light. He managed to combine realism and fantasy with his experimental style. Andre Gregory, theatre director, once said, "It's quite frightening and quite exhilarating being photographed by him, because you know he is going to see who you really are."

Avedon was dominant on the photography scene for 60 years, and was the subject of many museum exhibitions. He was named Number 1 on American Photo magazine's 1994 list of "Photography's Top 100." He worked at Harper's Bazaar from 1945 to 1965, and then at Vogue until 1990. He then became The New Yorker's first staff photographer in the magazine's history. The classic 1957 film "Funny Face," starring Fred Astaire and Audrey Hepburn, was based on his life, and he acted as consultant during the movie's production. While Mr. Avedon made his living in fashion photography, it was in his searing, vivid portraits that he achieved his legendary status. Mr. Avedon lived in New York City and in Montauk, where he owned a house until last year. He is survived by a son and four grandchildren.

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #319
Come One, Come Fall!

This Sunday, October 10th, the Shelter Island Historical Society [749-0025] is having its annual Fall Harvest Festival from 1 to 5 p.m. at Havens House Barn and Grounds. Admission is $5 for adults, $3 for kids, and $20 maximum for a family.

There are a few additional surcharges and discounts...

There is a $50 surcharge if you are a woman over 50 with a Bowflex body — and you know who you are ... Still wearing tank tops and shorts and nothing is jiggly? Just stay home, nobody wants to see that.

Hair — there are surcharges for bad hair this year. For Men: There is a $20 surcharge for any man sporting a comb-over. It's $25 if you try to hide your comb-over under a baseball cap. There's a $15 surcharge for a man with a mullet. Make up your mind, long or short, not both. $100 surcharge for bald men with a ponytail composed of the monks fringe. The 60s were over at least 40 years ago. You look silly, just stop it and shave your whole head, bald is sexy!

For Women: There are no surcharges for bad hair for women because everyone does her best and it's not your fault if you have a bad hair day. However, there are discounts for nice hair; 15% off if you are over 40 and do not have a visible dye line, an additional 5% off if you are willing to admit you are over 40.....50% off if you show up with two or more children and you even found the time to comb your hair...25% off if you just came in off your boat and had the courage to come to the festival with boat-hair.

Clothes - For Men: 25% off for showing up in nice clean clothes that coordinate. A surcharge of $5 for showing up in a tee-shirt that is in its third day of use. 5% discount if you show up with a tee shirt with an amusing saying. $10 surcharge for showing up in a shirt whose sleeves you removed with a box cutter on the job site....

For Women: There are no surcharges for women who are experiencing fashion mishaps, because everyone does her best and it's not your fault if you don't have enough clothes. 15% discount for women with really great foundation garments on the provision you tell the rest of the gals where you got the round up gear... 50% discount if you came with a husband and kids and you got everyone into neat clothes all at the same time! 20% discount for coordinating jewelry. 10% discount for wearing make-up. 5% discount for painted nails, 10% discount if you have a manicure.

The Fall Harvest Festival will have many fun family events such as hay rides, pumpkin carving, balloon animals, real animals, real balloons, chili dogs, balloon chili dogs, cotton candy, linen candy, wool candy, face painting, petting zoo, painting zoo, chili painting and more!

Plus, there are a few other activities not covered in the flyer...

Busted Bouquet Clinic: For the guys. What do you do when you're busted? You knew you shouldn't have done it and you knew how she'd react when at least four other women told her. The Busted Bouquet Clinic is for you. Learn how make a $5 bouquet look like a $50 one! Starting with a nice bouquet from a road side stand, learn how to stroll through the graveyard, looking pensive...but... instead of laying that bouquet down, you add to it from selection available. Learn all the tricks, like remembering to clip off the "In Memory Of" ribbon before you present it to her. A Busted Bouquet and a sappy sentimental card can get you off the couch in less than a week. Let's see Dr. Phil beat that!

Parental Controls Clinic. For the teens. Learn how to control your parents! Aren't they driving you crazy? You'd be amazed how a little costume development and a few key phrases can get them to love you enough to leave you alone! You'll learn the four interchangeable pieces to buy from LLBean for your basic costume. Wear this costume around your parents to make them think you can dress appropriately. Learn some key phrases to lull them into a false sense of security. Phrases like, "Oh Mom! You work so hard, please let me do that for you." Or, the ever effective, "I guess I never thought to tell you Dad, how much I appreciate you slaving away to keep a roof over our heads and food on the table."

So, come one, come all to the Fall Festival!

The night before the event, there was a racer's meeting to go over the rules and regulation. It was held under a tent on the side lawn of the Historical Society, and outside, there were many beautiful old cars parked, because many of the entrants wanted an excuse to drive them out so others could see them.

Next to one car, a magnificent 1929 Packard 626 Saloon car, there stood my friend John Gruen, talking to a young man who seemed to have dressed for the era. He wore a fedora, a suit, shined shoes. He had slicked-down hair and he was very handsome.

"This is an old friend of mine, Sam Guillory," John said, introducing me. "He owns this car."

"It is beautiful," I said. "Did you buy it recently, or have you had it a long time?"

"I've owned it twenty years," he said. "We found it, a complete wreck, in an old haybarn, in need of a full restoration."

Now, it is my experience that if you ask ten antique car owners where they got their cars from, eight of them will say they got them from old haybarns on farms around the country where they had sat for who knows how long as complete wrecks awaiting restoration.

According to the Antique Car Association of America, there are 171,000 antique cars in America today. That is more antique cars than there are farms. And so I think that collectors ought to be told that here on the East End, every farm has at least one old wreck of an antique car in its haybarn, sometimes two or even three. Here is a list of local farms and what kind of old wrecks they have in their barns. I called them all. You can get them cheap. Go get 'em.

Virginia. In 1802 he sold his house to Benjamin Botts. The house is now the Weems-Botts Museum. The latter gentleman was a defense lawyer for Aaron Burr, when the former vice president was on trial for treason in 1807. Burr was charged with conspiring with the Spanish to split the western settlements and wrest them from American control. Burr was acquitted. Botts and his wife, along with the governor of Virgina, were killed in a theatre fire in 1811.

As for Weems, he hawked his wares right until the end, dying on a bookselling tour in May, 1825.

In Book Business, Jason Epstein speculates that 21st century electronic media will bring book publishing back to something of the conditions that existed in the time of Weems, though it would be a much more efficient situation. Writers will not be standing under a tree, trying to literally drum up customers, but through the Internet will be able to reach readers directly. Epstein sees the imminent technology of having a reader anywhere on earth ordering a book and having that book printed electronically and bound, resulting in the happy equation of having only as many books printed as are ordered, eliminating publishers' overstocks. Though publishers themselves, if not eliminated, will be reduced in their influence.

Weems would have approved. Though the worldwide web for him would not have the same venal satisfactions as an inebriated parody at a tavern or the thump of a drum and direct oral exhortation on Main Street in East Hampton in a newly formed America.

PUMPKIN PICKIN' FUN AT THE HARBES & KRUPSKI FAMILY FARMS, OCTOBER 3

The South Fork may have its Montauk Highway traffic in the middle of July, but this past weekend on Sound Avenue and the Main Road on the North Fork it was bumper-to-bumper as thousands of pumpkin and fall vegetable fans came out in droves to enjoy the gorgeous fall weather and visit their favorite farmstands. The Harbes Family has two stands, one on Sound Avenue in Mattituck and another on the Main Road in Jamesport where the family has once again created its annual "a-mazing" maze in a cornfield. Further east in Peconic, the focus was on finding the perfect pumpkin at the Krupski Family farmstand on the Main Road. The Krupskis have been farming here on the North Fork for generations, so these folks know a thing or two about pumpkin growing.

Extreme Sport: Making Wine

Dodging Hurricanes Is Just Another Aspect Of Long Island's Grape Harvest

By David Stoll

They don't have hurricanes in California's Sonoma and Napa valleys. Nor do they in Bordeaux or Burgundy, or even Australia for that matter. But we do get them here on the East End. And we did this year, twice during the last month, when the outer edges of hurricanes Ivan and Jeanne hit us with torrential rains, flooding and winds. East End wine connoisseurs must be wondering what this means for our future drinking enjoyment.

Growing the perfect grape is the first step in making great wine. A vineyard manager must understand the local soil, pick the right grapes for the soil, determine what environmental factors might affect the grapes as they grow, and protect the grapes as they mature – all before harvesting the grapes to turn them into wine. This process is difficult in any location, but it is particularly challenging on eastern Long Island, because of the unpredictability of the weather.

Weather can affect grapes during their entire lifecycle, and all grape growing regions can have unexpectedly cool or warm, or wet or dry, seasons. That is one reason why some vintages for any wine, like the 2000 Bordeaux or the 1997 California Cabernet Sauvignon, are better than others. But out here on the East End, there is an added challenge. Just as the grapes are approaching peak maturity – plump, juicy, in beautiful bundles – and are almost ready to be harvested, hurricane season starts. Having a successful harvest requires special planning, and a bit of luck.

Severe pounding rain, like we have had this season, can bruise grapes and even separate them from their clusters. Bruised and separated grapes are not harvested. Strong gusts of wind can tear up the canopy of leaves that surrounds the grapes. These leaves, like all leaves, collect the sunlight which the grapes need to grow. To prepare for extreme weather, and also more generally to direct sunlight and nutrients to a relatively small amount of fruit for fuller flavors, most local vintners aggressively prune and thin their crops throughout the growing season. Smaller, lower, tighter clusters are less likely to be hit as hard by rain, and keeping the clusters and canopy low to the ground helps to avoid strong winds. The pruning is intense. Long Island wineries produce only about two tons of grapes per acre. While this may sound like a lot, consider that California wineries produce six or seven tons per acre, and Australia wineries produce as much as 15 to 18 tons per acre. This is why Long Island wines may seem more expensive than some might expect.

Luck also plays a role. The best luck is not to have severe weather at all, but even the timing of severe weather can be a critical factor in the success of a harvest. The happy experience of Shinn Estate Vineyards, on Oregon Road in Mattituck, illustrates this. David Page, who owns the winery with his wife Barbara Shinn, explained that they had harvested their crop of Sauvignon Blanc grapes just before Hurricane Jeanne came. As anyone who has tasted wine made from Sauvignon Blanc grapes can imagine, these are delicate, young, thin-skinned grapes that can take a real beating from heavy rain. The timing of the harvest was quite fortunate.

Shinn Estate Vineyards also grows a variety of red grapes, predominately Merlot and also some Cabernet Sauvignon, Cabernet Franc, Petite Verdot and Malbec, which are eventually mixed with the Merlot wine to create a more complex, Bordeaux-like flavor than pure Merlot can provide. These thick-skinned grapes will not be harvested for about three or four weeks, but they are already sufficiently mature that they were able to withstand the beatings nature gave them with minimal bruising. Much earlier severe weather might have caused more damage.

Shinn Estate Vineyards is relatively new, now in its sixth season. Mr. Page said that each season has been drastically different, which makes growing grapes on the East End exciting and challenging. He and Ms. Shinn host a walking tour of their vineyards and a wine tasting every Saturday at 3.

David Page and Barbara Shinn own Home restaurant in Manhattan. Visit the Shinn Estate Vineyards website at www.shinnvineyard.recipesfrom home.com.

Bayview Inn & Restaurant. Culinary fireworks from a new sparkler facing Peconic Bay. The historic Bayview has undergone many identity changes since its inception as an 1860's boutique hotel. Owners Bob and Pat Patchell have restored its original spirit, with seven guestrooms and the North Fork's most exciting new dining room. Thomas Lopez creates separate specials menus, complementing his regular card of winners like spinach pasta with chunky lobster, Asian-style breast of duck, and marinated lamb chops in mint demi-glace. Scrumptious desserts and a kid's menu ensure everyone goes home (or upstairs) happy. South Jamesport Ave. and Front Street, South Jamesport. 722-2659. Entrees, $18-$26. (Trueman-Honey, 8/1/03). {Di,S,Sh}

The Clubhouse at Indian Island. Along the pretty Peconic River at Indian Island Golf Course, this restaurant offers quality cooking at realistic prices convenient to diners from both forks. New proprietor Russ Moran transformed a drab dining room to one of warmth and comfort with soft lighting and smartly laid tables. His eclectic menu features the gently pan-fried oysters and clams on the half shell, which you'd swear were just plucked from the bay. French onion soup is deep in flavor. L.I. duck in a pepper cherry sauce and calves liver with bacon & onions were tasty and will leave no one hungry. Riverside Drive & Route 105, Riverhead. 727-0788. Entrees, $11.95-$16.95.(Bradbrook, 4/16/04.)

Cooperage Inn. With a beautiful new look emphasizing the cooperage theme, this charmer continues to carry the banner of North Fork cuisine. Chef/owner Jonathan Perkins, along with chefs Laimo and Hegeman, produce inspired appetizers such as rare sesame tuna carpaccio and pan-seared fresh mozzarella, and don't miss the sesame crusted calamari served over field greens with a soy vinaigrette. Steaks are steakhouse worthy, and the rigatoni ala vodka continues to dazzle. Fish here is always pristine and cooked with a light hand. Entrees $15.50-$30. 2218 Sound Ave. Baiting Hollow. 727-8994. (Simm, 1/10/03). [Br,D]

Desmond's Pub & Restaurant at the Inn at East Wind. The North Fork's new destination hotel hosts an elegant and restful dining room serving excellent a la carte dishes and classic pub fare. Executive chef Richard Laurelli's daily specials are consistent standouts, as evidenced by his chilled vegetable soup with lobster meat, as well as the Andalusia-style beef and chicken tapas. Pub favorites like crisply battered cod and chips hit the mark and familiar entrees like grilled lamb chops are perfectly prepared. The wine list is sensibly priced, though short on local vintages. Blueberry creme brulee was an inventive and winning update on a classic dessert. Entrees, $16-$26. 5720 Rt. 25A, Wading River. 929-3500. (Bradbrook, 8/29/03). {Pu}.

Do Little's. An oasis of relaxation in the North Fork's busiest shopping center. For eight years co-owner Donielle Cardinale's restaurant has provided the comforts of customer-friendly, large-portion cooking with panache. The burgers, quiches and salads are consistently good and chicken and pasta entrees often sparkle. Mussel enthusiasts thrill to their preparation in a flavorful Thai garlic sauce. Daily specials often feature inspired ingredient combinations and the fish of the day almost guarantees a creative coupling. Desserts are in transition and the wine list limited, but for comfort food with a flair, it's hard to outdo DoLittle's. Rt. 25, Mattituck Plaza, Mattituck. 298-4000. (Bradbrook, 7/28/01). [G]

Ile de Beaute. In a beautiful old house with courtyard tables, the spirit of Provence is alive in Greenport with highly authentic French cuisine. Its treatment of classics like escargots, French onion soup, and frogs' legs runs the gamut from superb to extraordinary. Rack of lamb, served with rosemary sauce reduction, is masterly. Desserts are tasty and the crepe options are best expressed in exponential notation. Service is deliberate but attentive. Entrees $24-35. 314 Main Street, Greenport. (Bradbrook, 7/12/02). [C,H,J]

La Cuvee Wine Bar & Bistro at the Greenporter Hotel. Gourmet bistro dining adjoining a hip boutique hotel footsteps from Greenport's vibrant downtown. The casually upscale dining room creates a pleasing environment for a light and adventurous menu. Seafood appetizers like tuna tartar and the sublime mussels in coconut and lemongrass broth bear an unmistakable Asian influence. But executive chef / owner Deborah Rivera's culinary artistry really announces itself when the entrees arrive. Long Island duck in an orange-infused coconut sauce is impressive enough, but topped by her otherworldly Chilean Sea Bass poached in a miso-sesame broth. Exceptional wine list, with by-the-glass offering many pleasant surprises. Entrees, $21-$26. 326 Front Street, Greenport. 477-0066. (Bradbrook, 4/25/03). [B,Wi]

La Plage. A glowing beacon along the Sound coast for sophisticated diners. The stellar reputation of chef / proprietor Wayne Wadington derives from cutting-edge combinations of difficult-to-secure ingredients. His creations fly off the menu as quickly as off the plate, but if you have the chance try the lightly seared scallops with blue crab mille feuille in a kaffir lime / sweet pea sauce or yellow fin tuna paired with chorizo sausage and butternut squash. Desserts range from decadent (chocolate cake with an espresso mousse) to delicate (Tahitian vanilla crème brulee.). All are mind boggling. Top wine list, too. Entrees $22-33. 131 Creek Road, Wading River. 744-9200. (Bradbrook,2/04). [Ap,Ch] restaurant operating since 1950. Wittmeier brothers' time-honored menu contains dishes too good to go out of style. Delectable sauerbraten is perfectly tender and the stuffed cabbage very good. Duck breast salad, recently introduced, is another winner. Crab cakes and lobster salad are real treats, but the big surprise is the world-class shrimp and crabmeat quiche. Home-baked desserts are splendid and their take-out pie business is brisk. Wines are mostly limited to local vintages. Reservations not needed, but day or night, it's always a crowded house. Entrees, $9-$17. Rt. 25 Aquebogue. 722-3655. (Bradbrook, 10/4/02). [T]

Red Door. A quintessentially North Fork restaurant: Manhattan-caliber cuisine paired with an ambience of low-key charm. The Mediterranean-influenced American regional menu always offers a panoply of pastas as well as meat and fish dishes. Perhaps their winningest recipe occurred by accident. Ask genial chef /owner Stephen Mazzella for the story behind his remarkable porterhouse pork chop with honey, capers and cayenne. A true instance of luck being the residue of design! Dessert lovers have their vocabulary stretched by such wonders as raspberry crème brulee and Godiva chocolate cake with Tahitian vanilla bean ice cream. Ample wine list. Entrees – $16–$28. 13560 Main Rd., Mattituck. 298-4800. (Trueman-Honey, 12/03). [D]

Scrimshaw. Chef/co-owner Rosa Ross, whose culinary credentials are carved in many a menu from Hong Kong to Italy to Manhattan, brings her latest invention to Greenport. Nestled at the end of Preston's Dock, there are dazzling views of Shelter Island. The slightly crammed dining room is made intimate and warm by sophisticated lighting and subdued music. The menu is full of interesting tastes, starting with excellent duck confit-stuffed spring rolls and hearty fish chowder. Especially good among the eclectic entrees are tamarind lamb shanks with lemon risotto and the supremely comforting seafood in a sweet, tangy kaffir lime coconut broth. Interesting wine list. Preston's Dock (at end of Main Street), Greenport. 477-8882. (Simm, 06/04).

Stonewall's. Haute cuisine in a tranquil setting, at the Woods Course at Cherry Creek in Riverhead. Step into the warm and inviting dining room, however, and your thoughts will happily shift from golf course to main course. Many superb entrees, including the delicate halibut in a mustard-nut crust, are worth savoring long after the meal has concluded. Duck a l'orange on a bed of wild rice is another standout as is the deeply flavorful lobster bisque. Rigatoni with roasted tomatoes, mozzarella, capers and olives is exquisitely al dente. Fine wines and creatively fruity desserts complete a dining experience par excellence. Entrees $15-$27. 967 Reeves Ave., Riverhead. 506-0777. (Bradbrook, 9/12/03).{Lu,N}

Touch of Venice. Top-notch Italian cuisine in a delightful setting on Mattituck Inlet. Named appropriately for location, cuisine and a large mural dominating the dining room, this is family dining par excellence with a sophisticated ambience. Among the kitchen's highlights: Orient Point oysters, chilled but not icy; baby spinach salad with gorgonzola; black angus porterhouse. Manicotti in a fresh, simple tomato sauce is among the many pleasing pasta dishes. Lobster Meat over angel hair pasta, a frequent special, is an exciting dish of imaginative complexity and one of the North Fork's perennial favorites. Cold seafood bruschetta is another special to watch for. Entrees $16-$34. Wickham Avenue at Matt-A-Mar Marina, Mattituck. 298-5851. (Bradbrook, 8/16/02). [L,O]

Tuscan House. Your table is yours for the evening at this elegant, upscale Italian. Authentic, classical dishes bear the deft touch of chef William Oster. His fish is exceptionally fresh and his osso bucco masterly. But his virtuosity lies in the care with which he pairs his 16 pastas and his sublime sauces. The results range from delicate to intense. Pappardelle with a puree of beans dressed with soppresata, fresh chilies, garlic and parmigiano reggiano is typically adventurous and winning. The dessert tray is filled with excellent choices. Well-chosen wines, emphasis on regional Italians. 673 Osborn Ave., Riverhead. 727-2330. (Bradbrook, 9/7/01). [C,I,P]

Tweed's. Owner Ed Tuccio parlayed his interests in history, Americana and the bison to create this unique eatery. The décor puts one in mind of an expensive turn-of-the-century men's club, but with a romantic twist. Notable appetizers include Oysters Portland, enveloped in sautéed leeks and crisp bacon, and the Bistro Salad, redolent of blue cheese and roasted beets. Aside from Tweed's excellent specialty of the house, succulent farm-raised bison, also recommended are the Sashimi Sesame Tuna, carb-free vegetable lasagna, and Duck Two Ways. Don't skip dessert: the pastry chef is a graduate of the Cordon Bleu in London.

Entrees $19-26. 17 E. Main St., Riverhead. 208-3151. (Trueman-Honey, 7/04/03). [St].

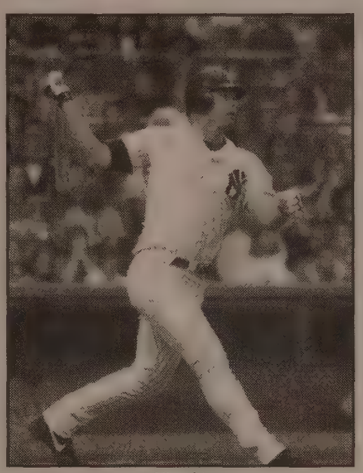
Away At School... By David Lion Rattiner

The Yankee Fanatic

Senior year at Northeastern University is going to be kind of weird. I called my best friend John today. John recently graduated from Mary Washington University, got a degree in mathematics, spent the summer as a waiter, and now has moved back to Virginia to be near his girlfriend and to hopefully land a job doing something for the government. As far as work goes, he really isn't sure what he wants to do but feels like if he did know, he'd be good at it. He has made the decision to venture out on his own, which I think is great, and to see if there is a place for him working somewhere with math, hopefully where he can do stuff that has to do with saving the world, or protecting America at least. You know, stuff that has to do with Washington D.C. John is also a big Yankee fan.



Giambi

John's family, which is like my second family, are also Yankee fans. His Dad used to be a cop, on the beat in New York City and you know how it goes with the police and Yankees. Every year around this time, I'll hear how the Yankees are doing. It is like straight out of the play Damn Yankees, every part of life sort of revolves around the Yankees. When I was young and the Yankees would win the World Series, I would pack into a car with John and his entire Italian family and go watch the parade at City Hall. We would have an amazing view; John's Dad would talk his way past the barricades and we would watch New York go bananas as the Yankees went by us.

A couple of days ago my girlfriend Jennifer and I saw Jason Giambi walk out of the Ritz Carlton in Boston. For those that don't know, my girlfriend is a Red Sox fan, and Jason Giambi plays for the Yankees as a hitter. We were about ten feet away from him. There was a lot of excitement in the streets, as you might imagine. There was a lot of cursing and cheering at the same time as the massive Giambi stomped out of the hotel toward a cab. The guy was amazingly huge and also had those crazy eyes. You see it on TV when he's batting, and I can tell you that you see it in real life, as well.

It was the middle of the night, but I couldn't resist calling my little sister Molly back in New York who is what I like to call a psycho Yankee fan. Molly, who is fourteen I think, recently won a playwriting contest and put up a student show at Bay Street Theater in Sag Harbor. The play was about two best friends who cut school and go to a Yankee game together. Molly has it all, she has the jacket, she has the hat, she has a sweat suit, she knows the names, she knows the numbers, and she knows what they have to do in order to make it to the World Series. Every day, she thinks about the Yankees. She would enjoy hearing about my Giambi sighting.

My girlfriend was not impressed with Giambi, which I liked, of course. My cell phone was ringing as Jen was telling me how she thought Giambi looked fat and I started thinking about how great of a girlfriend she is. Molly answered the phone and I told her the news. "Did he look thin? He lost a lot of weight because he has been sick."

I then realized that I had a big problem here. My sister Molly and Jen are not going to get along. Red Sox fans and Yankee fans don't mix. But I'm a Yankee fan and I have no problem with Red Sox fans. But I think that I am one of those open minded people. I started to think about what a fist fight might look like between my sister and Jen. I have play fought with both, and I can tell you that my sister would totally kick my girlfriend's ass. What would I do then? Beat up my sister in order to avenge the butt kicking? I can't fight my little sister; she is only fourteen years old.

So I hung up the phone, looked at Jennifer in a weird way. "What's wrong?" She said with her sixth sense.

"Nothing," I said.

But there was something wrong here. A Yankee fan and a Red Sox fan are fire and ice. It's Batman and the Joker, it's Superman and Lex Luthor. What is going to happen when Jen watches a Yankees vs. Red Sox game with my sister, or John, or John's Dad? They are all going to all hate one another and it will be my fault in some horrible way.

Converting Jen to a Yankee fan is a possibility, but it would take tremendous brainwashing. Converting a Red Sox fan to a Yankees fan and vice versa is like trying to turn a Nazi into a Tree Hugger. It just doesn't happen. It must be done, however, if this relationship is going to work. It must be done.

This morning I bought Jen a Yankees hat. She looked at me, smiled, and then flushed it down the toilet. Tomorrow I'm going to buy her a Derek Jeter poster. No woman, not even a Red Sox fan, can resist this.

When In Manhattan... by Oliver Peterson

A Vague Plan in a Free City

Sometimes I go to the city without having any particular destination. Exhibits and shows and events are all well and good, but it never hurts to just take a ride into town and see where it leads. If the planets are aligned, it will be a great time. If they're not, well, you might end up wandering around and laughing at people. These free and breezy days where we allow ourselves to step outside the schedule and actually "be the ball," instead of just hitting it, are good ones. They can also be expensive. It's very tempting to drop $39.99 on a 12-inch Elvis doll, $250 on a pair of those fashionable long pimp shoes everyone's wearing in Soho, or maybe more on vintage Sigue Sigue Sputnik and Ramones vinyl when aimlessly cavorting along the streets of the East Village.

A car ride, a Jitney, or a train already sets you back some dough before your feet hit the pavement, and finding some fun things to do for free is an excellent way to avoid the trap of over-shopping while you walk. Since I just spent the day below 14th Street, and the entire city is a little big to cover, I'm going to give you a few ideas in the vicinity for spending some time without spending a ton of cash.

First, take the Williamsburg Bridge in. There's no toll, and it spits you right out on Delancey Street, which is reasonably close to both Soho and the Village. The East Village is always a good place for people-watching. There are punks, wannabe punks, and scores of lunatics, drunks, and nodding junkies. The neighborhood continues to change and clean up, so be on the lookout for these characters that might one day be altogether banished from the island of Manhattan, let alone downtown. People-watching in Soho is a little different. It's a lot more like here in the summer. Ghastly and overtly style-conscious people posture between trying to emulate the Strokes or a Brit-Pop equivalent and, for the ladies, Paris Hilton or Carrie Bradshaw. I don't really want to buy those pimp shoes.

For animal lovers, the dog run in Tompkins Square Park is a fun place to visit. There you can be immersed in the archetypes of the Lower East Side while watching the hipsters' dogs play. The run is divided into above and below 23-pound sections. If you have a pug, bring him along without fear of that squatter's unruly pitbull with the spiked collar. If you want to shop, there are plenty of upstanding gentlemen in the neighborhood selling their wares for great prices. Keep an eye out for their cardboard displays of books, used makeup and other exciting items they've excavated during archeological digs of urban refuse. I once got brand new snowboard bindings for $10. I don't think the itchy retailer knew what he had.

If you want a little history and you're one of those annoying cell phone types, go to talkingstreet.com. They offer cell phone tours of Lower Manhattan and the World Trade Center Site and the Lower East Side. Jerry Stiller narrates the LES tour, and up until October it was free by simply calling 1-800-644-3545. It might now cost $5.95 for one week of 24-hour access. Sigourney Weaver, who has recently been sighted in our neck of the woods, narrates the tour of Lower Manhattan for the same price. Go to the site for more info. When you get hungry and can pry your camera phone from your clutches, give Dojo on St. Marks a try. For the price of a bagel with cream cheese out here, you can get a full meal. The soy burger dinner is one of my favorites and costs less than four bucks. Once again, you can incorporate people-watching by sitting outdoors along the sidewalk. They warn you not to leave cash unattended and appreciate your prompt exit after you consume your meal to "allow others to enjoy the experience." At four dollars a meal, the push for turnover is understandable.

Finally, the Downtown Boathouse is a must for freeloaders looking for a unique experience. Until October 15th, they continue to offer free kayak lessons and rentals on the Hudson. On Columbus Day, October 11th, they will run all-day local paddling. Compared to the East End's prices for kayaking, free is almost miraculous. One night over beers and amid a cloud of smoke, David Lee Roth told me that he kayaks around Manhattan. That's another story, but if it's good enough for Diamond Dave, isn't it good enough for you? Call (646) 613-0375 or visit www.downtownboathouse.org for details and directions.

The bottom line is to go in there and find things that interest you. It's a big city worth exploring. We don't live far, but we can be tourists like the best of them.

East End Business Today . . . By Tom Neely

It's transportation time

The East End is currently grappling with many issues that affect our quality of life as residents and as members of our business community. Many of these are related to land use, including affordable housing and transportation, and are intertwined.

For 17 years I have been serving on local and regional transportation committees. During that time, many dedicated volunteers and paid consultants have devoted hundreds of hours to studying the situation. Thousands of pages of analysis and recommendations have been developed, yet very few improvements have actually been made to our transportation system. Now it appears that this model of operating may be changing.

Last week in a public hearing, the Southampton Town Board received a series of recommendations to improve the local transportation situation. These recommendations came from the Southampton Town Transportation Advisory Committee.

These recommendations are the result of several years of work by a great many people, including Town Councilwoman Linda Kabot (one of the most organized and energetic people I have ever worked with) and Councilman Steve Kenny, along with many interested and involved residents and transportation professionals. Research, dialogue and judgment have been blended to craft this document. While it does not contain a 'silver bullet' solution to solve all the transportation related problems that affect our lives, it is a practical plan that contains a great deal of good information, many solid ideas and sets a positive direction for future efforts. The Southampton Town Board seems to be supportive of the ideas presented and it is a plan that needs and deserves the vocal support of the Southampton community.

Recommendations which focus on improving traffic flow on County Rd. 39A are properly identified as the most immediate priority; longer term ideas to develop a better transportation system for Southampton and points east are also included. This plan recommends that the Town establish a permanent Transportation Commission and a transportation position/department within Town government, so that there can be focused, professional full time pursuit of these initiatives.

Ideas that would achieve the goal of improving public transportation systems and the goal of alleviating congestion in the hamlets of Water Mill and Bridgehampton, but require additional study and dialogue, are also included. This plan also correctly identifies the need to involve regional partners, most especially our neighbors in East Hampton Town and Village, in order to develop broader solutions.

As one piece of a larger puzzle, this plan is the first step in addressing some transportation issues. There is a great deal more local and regional effort needed to address the many transportation issues we face.

One critical element that will help solve this puzzle is the passage of the legislation put forth by Assemblyman Fred Thiele to create an East End Transportation Authority. Late last week I was one member of an East End ad hoc group that went to beautiful Cape Cod to meet for several hours with various representatives of the Cape Cod Regional Transit Authority and Commission. While Assemblyman Thiele's proposed legislation always made sense to me, it is now my opinion that this proposal is by far the best way to achieve true regional transportation solutions. Cape Cod is light years ahead of us in solving transportation problems. Much of their success has been achieved through a great commitment to solving problems through joint public/private efforts and to wielding the power that comes with having their own Transportation Authority.

But while we work on the regional SEEDS (Sustainable East End Development Strategies) transportation study and push forward with Assemblyman Thiele's legislation, it is critical that the public support, and the Southampton Town Board endorse, this update to the Southampton Town Comprehensive Plan. It is a wise step in the right direction for the Town and the South Fork.

JUST FOR KIDS

AN EAST END KID:

BARNEY WOWS 'EM IN THE BIG APPLE

By EMILY HART POST
WITH A LITTLE HELP FROM KATLEAN DE MONCHY AND DAVID POST

Barney's Colorful World came to town and it filled Radio City Music Hall to the rafters. The theater is not perfect for kids' events, because if you are too far back it is hard to see very well, although you could hear the Barney songs perfectly. They should do this in a round place where everyone has a good seat.

Our friends Barney, Baby Bop and BJ, along with talented kids, put on a terrific show. Mom and Dad loved the Elvis-like starfish (who's Elvis?) but I enjoyed all the characters and the places we all visited with our imaginations. The best part for everyone is the closing song as it is on every Barney program "I LOVE YOU – YOU LOVE ME" where every kid hugged their moms and dads and the love spread all through the theater. Go Barney!

Have an event or some good cheer to spread? Send an email to david@nextpert.com and let's build a little kids' network in the Hamptons and New York City.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

SPAT, Southold Project in Aquaculture Training, is a community organization committed to the cause of restoring shellfish in local bays and waters. On Friday evening, October 1, a gala dinner held at the Inn at East Wind in Wading River, New York, honored Lydia Bastianich, a genuinely friendly and down-to-earth woman who we all know through her New York City restaurants, instructive cookbooks and Public television appearances. Other honorees included Kim Terrault, SPAT's program director and Michael Caracciolo, a Suffolk County legislator.

It warmed my heart to meet and chat with a couple of the volunteers who are eagerly engaged in the SPAT program. Christopher Groocock of Cutchogue, a retired veterinarian, is delighted with the five-star grant with its built-in education component. It allows the volunteers to purchase testing equipment, to observe the different areas where shellfish can grow best, and most importantly to be able to work with children, ages 5 through 10, who are brought along to the creeks once a month to learn how to test for water quality, measure growth-rate and to see how shellfish best grow in a particular area.

SPAT's worthwhile project is of particular importance to shellfish lovers everywhere. As a chef and teacher, Lydia Bastianich understands preservation and that "food is only as good as the quality at hand." In her introductory remarks, Lydia acknowledged all the SPAT volunteers, who work an unbelievable number of hours a month, and the advisory committee. They are the ones who are making "bringing back the shellfish" happen.

LYDIA BASTIANICH'S LONG FUSILLI WITH MUSSELS, SAFFRON AND ZUCCHINI

Lydia suggests having fun with the pasta shapes you choose. The zucchini and spring onion (or scallions) are cut long and thin to match the shape of whatever pasta you choose for the dish.
Makes 6 servings

2 small zucchini, about 12 ounces
1 1/2 cups chicken stock or low-sodium chicken broth
1 teaspoon saffron threads
5 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
5 cloves garlic, peeled
2 medium spring onions or scallions, white and light green parts only, trimmed and cut into thin strips
2 tablespoons unsalted butter, cut into 4 pieces
2 pounds small mussels, preferably cultivated, scrubbed
1 pound long curly fusilli, spaghetti or linguine
3 tablespoons chopped fresh Italian parsley
Freshly ground pepper

1. Bring 6 quarts of salted boiling water in an 8-quart pot over high heat.

2. Trim the ends of the zucchini and cut zucchini lengthwise into quarters. With a paring knife, trim out the seeds from the zucchini quarters and discard. Cut the rest of the zucchini into thin strips, about 1/4x1/4x2-inches. Pour the stock over the saffron in a small, heatproof pan and let steep while continuing the sauce.

3. Heat 3 tablespoons of the olive oil in a large skillet over medium heat. Whack the garlic cloves with the flat side of a knife and toss them into the oil. Cook, shaking the pan until golden, about 2 minutes. Scatter the zucchini and spring onions over the oil, then season lightly with salt and stir until wilted, about 2 minutes. Continue cooking, stirring until the vegetables are tender, about 3 minutes. Remove from heat and set aside.

4. Pour the saffron and stock into the pan, increase heat to high, and bring to a boil. Slide the mussels into the pan, cover and cook just until opened, about 4 minutes. Remove the pan from heat and, with a slotted spoon, transfer half the mussels to a heatproof bowl. Cover and set aside. Let the mussels remaining in the pan stand until cool enough to handle.

5. Meanwhile, stir the fusilli into the boiling water. Bring the water back to a boil, stirring frequently. Cook the pasta, semi-covered, stirring occasionally, until done, about 8-10 minutes.

6. When the mussels in the pan are cool enough to handle, pluck them from their shells and return flesh to the sauce.

7. Drain the pasta and return it to the pot. Add the shelled mussels and their sauce and the parsley to the pasta. Bring to a boil over medium heat and stir until the sauce is lightly thickened and coats the pasta. Taste and season with pepper and, if necessary, salt. Transfer the pasta to a heated platter or serving bowls and top with the reserved mussels in their shells.

STUFFED CLAMS SAMBUCCA

Carol Beaugard, an active participant in SPAT, offers this timely recipe, which can be adapted to mussels and oysters.
Serves 6-8 as appetizer

24-32 well scrubbed clams
1/4 cup plain breadcrumbs
6 tablespoons unsalted butter, softened
1- 2 cloves garlic, minced
1/4 cup Sambucca or Pernod
1 tablespoon olive oil

1. Place the clams in a bowl of fresh tap water and scrub them one against the other to rid sand. Transfer to a clean bowl and repeat the process two or three more times to completely rid sand.

2. Put the softened butter in a bowl with the garlic and liqueur and stir to mix.

3. Pour the olive oil into a saucepan large enough to hold the clams and place over medium heat. Add the clams, cover the pan and cook just long enough to steam the clams open. Remove from the pan as they open and reserve their juice. When cool enough to handle, remove and discard half shells. Place the clams in their shells on a baking sheet. Top each clam with about 1/2 teaspoon Sambucca mixture and drizzle over a bit of their juice. Place under the broiler for a minute or two or just until golden. Serve warm.

Clams Sambucca is adapted from Sensational Shellfish, the Best of the North Fork, Morris Press. The book is available through Cornell Cooperative Extension Marin Program, 3690 Cedar Beach Rd, Southold, NY 11971

Bio-diversity On The North And South Forks

Saturday, October 2 was indeed a busy day for me. I drove over to the North Fork to attend the 11th annual NOFA, the Northeast Organic Farming Association, food and music fair at the Golden Earthworm Organic Farm in Jamesport. NOFA is an organization of farmers, gardeners and consumers working to create a sustainable regional food supply. Over 2100 members of NOFA have disseminated information on organic farming for 35 years, according to Rex Farr, a member of the state board governing council. Numerous farmers from both the North and South Fork donated organic produce to several restaurants that were given a mystery box of locally grown organic produce. The challenge was for the chefs to create inspired recipes with the ingredients they received, which were then served at the NOFA event.

Some of the uniquely different dishes included a watermelon and onion salad from Tierra Mar/Atlantica in Westhampton Beach, a green tomato and leek lasagna from Savanna's in Southampton, crispy potato and leek pancakes from Divine Country Café in Southold, a fennel, wax bean and goat cheese salad with basil vinaigrette from L.O.O.K in Hampton Bays, and green bean, cherry tomato salad with tomato parsley vinaigrette from Tweed's in Riverhead and Michael Meehan's chilled organic vegetable soup with pumpkin seed and smoked duck garnish, with ever so many more delicious one-of-a-kind tastings.

I worked my way back to Southampton to act as one of the judges for a pie contest at the Historical Museum annual craft fair. This was a family day with lots of kids in tow to enjoy the jester in his multi-colored outfit, complete with bells, bangles and magic, along with the horse-shoer and the broom-maker. One of the highlights was the reenactment of a revolutionary kitchen on the grounds of the museum, complete with a Dutch oven hearth. An apple pie was completely prepared from scratch on premises and baked in the hearth (it was one of the contest entries and took second place) and fried bread made from an old Indian recipe. I was charmed by the authentically costumed women and their delicious fried bread.

Twelve attractive pies were entered to be tasted. It was a hard job but someone had to do it, as they say. The pies ranged from the classic two-crusted apple to apple crumb to caramel apple nut to pecan pie, pumpkin pie, lemon chiffon and custard cream. A straight-forward apple pie and the pecan pie each won first place in their respective categories. It was difficult to even imagine eating anything more that day.

I came home to catch my breath and get ready to attend an event at Frederic Rambaud and Alan Ceppos' home in Water Mill. The Worldwatch Institute, an Environmental Research Group based in Washington, DC, was putting on an Eco-Salon, where author Peter Matthiessen and senior researchers Michael Renner and Brian Halweil spoke on "Reclaiming Homegrown Pleasures in a Global Age."

Peter Matthiessen delved into the history of farming and fishing on the East End, and how fruitful life was for the folk to live off the land and the sea. He discussed how things have changed, forcing many of these people out. "Yet the quaintness of the Little Red Schoolhouse in Sagaponack is still there," he added. Michael Renner familiarized the audience with Worldwatch. This fairly small organization is made up of 22 effective and pragmatic researchers who write, lecture, and point to solutions for pressing environmental and social problems. Their latest project is on redefining global security to focus less on military activities and more on how climate change and persistent poverty are as big a threat to our safety as terrorism. Among the topics Worldwatch covers are population growth, the rise in infectious diseases, and environmental health issues, which are all tremendous challenges in today's atmosphere. The core of Brian Halweil's talk was on food. He argued that although here in the United States we have the most technologically advanced food system in the world, the high level of uniformity and centralization in our fields makes us like a proverbial sitting duck. The long distance hauling of food which defines our food system creates endless opportunities for accidental or malicious contamination. "The decision to eat local is a powerful political choice," he continues. Supporting our local farmers and preparing foods from the good earth surrounding us is not only good for our health but it keeps money in the local economy. Brian recognizes that complete self-sufficiency is not possible. "Of course, we don't grow bananas, coffee beans or cocoa, but it's important to not import foods that can be readily produced nearby, and this will keep our landscape diverse." We must try to sustain our local farmers to ensure that they will endure.

After the talks, Alan and Frederic graciously hosted a superb buffet of a great variety of dishes made with locally grown produce and prepared by Martine Abitbol, a caterer on Shelter Island. I ate!

Magnolia

29 Main Street, Sag Harbor
631-725-0101

We walked into the soft glow of Magnolia's dining room on a Friday night and took a seat at the bar. Linda, who owns the restaurant with her partner Joe, introduced herself and asked what we wanted to drink. The wine list was extensive, and I had tasted the deliciously spicy Bloody Mary at Magnolia before, so I had a hard time choosing. By the time our table was ready, we had selected a bottle of Pinot Noir. Our waitress handed us menus as I looked around at the small, yet open, room. The doors were flung wide open and the ceiling fans were going.

The menu at Magnolia is not your typical elegant fare. It is, instead, expertly prepared comfort food. It's the highest quality fare with a Southern flare. The warm cornbread to start set the tone of the Deep South. My friend Jess and I were debating between the molasses-glazed baby back ribs and the buttermilk fried chicken. But to start, I knew one thing. I had had the crabcake before, and this is not to be missed. I have thought of it every time I stroll past Magnolia, even when I'm not hungry at all. I do not love crabcakes, but the crabcake at Magnolia is exceptional. Needless to say, we ordered one of those, and it was all I remembered and more. Huge lumps of real fresh crab, without the fillers, are what make this appetizer so special. Jess and I realized that we actually had to put our conversation on hold while eating the crabcake, because once it was in your mouth, you needed to savor it.

Next came the oysters, fried with a crispy coating, disguising a warm meat underneath. Oysters on the half-shell get a lot of play out here on the East End, but these shelled oysters fried in a light batter and drizzled with lemon were unique and delicious. We passed up the tempting hot buffalo wings for the fried calamari, and the rings were wrapped in a thick, crispy coating.

We decided to share two entrees. The catfish was lightly fried and served with fluffy mashed potatoes and spinach sauteed in a garlicky butter. The fish was light and flaky and just seemed to disintegrate on the tongue. We just couldn't pass up the buttermilk fried chicken in a place called Magnolia. It was a little crunchy on the outside, but the deliciously juicy meat on the inside was savory. The mashed potatoes that accompanied the chicken were smooth, bathed in a thick gravy and garnished with a bed of perfectly crispy, perfectly cooked string beans. We got a side of macaroni and cheese, which was homemade with muenster, grueyere, and cheddar. The three cheeses are finely grated and mixed with the pasta. The dish was crispy on the top, but creamy on the inside.

When we sat back to digest the feast we had just devoured, Linda joined us at our table to tell us the story of Magnolia. The restaurant opened in April 2002 and made its mark with a great local following. She said that sometimes people think the restaurant is fancier than it is, but jokes "don't let the white tablecloths fool you." Linda considers the cuisine "contemporary and classic American food with a southern influence." The motto of Magnolia? "Come home again." While some restaurants keep a rigid ambience, Magnolia strives to be a home away from home. Linda assured me that the restaurant is never open without the owners there to make sure everyone's having a great time. She likes to think of the restaurant as "an extension of your dining room." Because of this mentality, it has attracted a great bar scene, which draws a particularly large and enthusiastic crowd on karaoke night, which was Thursdays all summer, but will be returning to its Saturday slot after Halloween. Speaking of Halloween, there will be a fabulous costume party with prizes, including $500 cash for best costume. Throughout the winter, Magnolia will be offering that delectable fried chicken as a two-for-one special, which I will certainly be taking advantage of. There is also a $23 3-course prix-fixe all night, every night, except Saturday, when it is available before 7. The off-season also means that Sunday at Magnolia is Hamptons employee night.

The chef, Paul Mangano, is new at Magnolia. He's versatile in that he likes Asian cooking, he was raised Italian, and he was French-trained in Manhattan. He has also managed to master a menu you don't find often around here, with its southern style.

Enough down-time for us, it seemed, as the desserts emerged. Jess had a crème brulee with a crispy cap, her spoon skating on the thin ice of the scorched sugar. I had a mango sorbet, which was like an icy breath of fresh air. It was garnished with mint leaves, a delicate and refreshing finale to a wonderfully satisfying meal.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

ART AND POLITICS: MARIA MACIAK'S INSTALLATION AT ROSS SCHOOL GALLERY

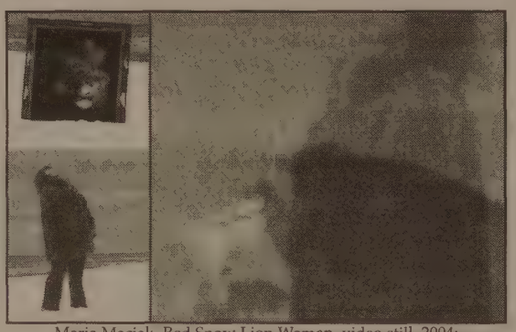
Every four years, the subject of "politics" becomes paramount: 2004's presidential election makes the topic even more pervasive, a top priority for not only America but for much of the world.

This observation serves as a reason why yours truly finds "politics" everywhere, especially in a recent art exhibit by Ross School instructor and media maker, Maria Maciak. Perhaps the same show would evoke an entirely different interpretation if seen at a different time and place.

That Ms. Maciak was born in Lodz, Poland, is another curiosity: Lodz was the location for the most prestigious cinema school in the world during the 1960s; it was where Roman Polanski learned his craft. Polish filmmakers (and writers) were among the most political artists anywhere, conveying their messages through equally innovative styles.

It's no surprise then that Ms. Maciak's work reflects a national aesthetic tradition for anti-establishment themes couched in non-linear devices, subjectivity, symbolism and often Surrealism/Expressionism.

Ms. Maciak's multi-channel video installation, "Red Snow Lion Woman," is a perfect example of a political statement wrapped in special stylistic techniques. First, consider the work's physical configuration consisting of various viewing fields. There's a white curtain, with a large hole for spectators' exits and entrances, upon which images are projected.



©2004 Visual Pollution

Maria Maciak, Red Snow Lion Woman, video still, 2004;

Then there's a nearby video monitor projecting figures on a split, 3-figure screen including (1) a painting of a lion; (2 & 3) two views of the same red-haired woman, one a long shot, the other a medium shot. The viewer perceives a fragmented vision (a close up of the female's face is projected on the white curtain) while simultaneously absorbing the whole person.

There's also a sense of timelessness and placelessness although it's apparent that the woman is caught in a barren, snowy landscape. The alternating slow, normal, and pixilated fast motion accounts for such ambiance. Such lack of time, place and chronology imbues the piece with a surrealistic atmosphere.

These stylistic effects are disorienting as we wonder why the woman keeps repeating her behavior in a compulsive-obsessive mode, constantly bending over, perhaps washing her hair. What terrible pain is she feeling and why?

That the work is emotional, subjective and obviously symbolic evokes diverse interpretations: perhaps the woman is identified with the lion (she's wearing a fur coat) but finds herself without his power and control. Fur pieces are draped around the video monitor, signifying a motif that again makes us ponder the connection between the woman and the lion.

One thing is sure. The installation can't escape its political theme, even if the message is an ambiguous one. That characterization gives the work its salient "edge" and arresting conceptual dimension.

The installation will be on view at the Ross School Gallery until Oct 12. Contact Ms. Maciak at 631-907-5164 for directions.

HONORING THE ARTIST: STEVEN ROMM

This week's cover artist, Wainscott resident Steven Romm, isn't in a hurry. At least when it comes to developing his art. He fervently believes that there's a step-by-step process involved in creating work, that "each painting you do should be evolving, that each piece should present a new challenge and should be better than the last one."

Acting on such a belief takes patience, and Mr. Romm has proven through the years that he has it. He has never wavered from his chosen profession, has always seen whatever he's done as a step toward his ultimate goal, "creating a masterpiece."

That's quite an objective to have, but Mr. Romm isn't arrogant about having such an idea. In fact, he's the first to admit he may never achieve his goal. "It has more to do with my wanting to get better with each work that I do," he explained. "I don't want to do the same thing over and over again. I want to incorporate change in each work, to convey more insight.

"I want to continue with an existing theme until I get to a point where I feel I've reached the end. I want to do something different, to achieve a 'breakthrough' with perhaps new color, material, style. I'd like to make that leap. To continue on my journey toward doing a masterpiece."

Asked what artist he considers making that breakthrough, Mr. Romm gives a surprising answer: "I find it more in music. Like Tom Waits' CD, Alice. I think music has more potential for breakthrough endeavors."

We're intrigued not only by Mr. Romm's notion of his masterpiece but also by the committed journey he undertook along the way. Certain defining experiences helped a lot: his one-person show when he was only eleven; art lessons as a teenager at Adelphi University and the New School (with sculptor Chaim Gross). Later he majored in painting at Boston University where he says he got a solid, traditional foundation, learning to grind his own pigments and absorbing archival principles. Other experiences prepared Mr. Romm for his journey: teaching public school art for seventeen years; owning his own photography business; being an artists' agent, working for the well-known ballet photographer, Harvey Edwards; and running his own fine arts poster company.

Moving to the Hamptons from North Shore's Sea Cliff also figured predominately into his life's objective. "Living here told me what I was going to paint. It was impossible for me not to use the environment. I was attracted to the open fields, to the clouds as symbols of all clouds, and to the horizon. But I saw more than just the landscape. I saw the freedom that the clouds represented. Yet there was always a house anchored to the land that impeded that freedom."

This week's cover, "Narrow Lane," reflects this idea of striving for freedom and openess, the painting drawing us down the road while at the same time making us aware of the structure firmly rooted to the ground. The setting may also represent Mr. Romm's real journey down a road that promises both liberation and perhaps even a "masterpiece."

–Marion Wolberg Weiss

Mr. Romm's work is on view in the current show at East Hampton's Lizan Tops Gallery until Oct. 17.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood In The Hamptons

Right off the bat, I don't want to forget to have you forget any thought of seeing The Forgotten, Julianne Moore's crack at a scary movie. A clever ad campaign bunted Sky Captain out of the box office by sucking audiences into theatres as falsely as people get sucked up into the sky in The Forgotten. Yeah, you read me correctly. Don't be a sucker or a suckee. Now I want to warn you to not be put off by the cornball title Infernal Affairs. At least, it suggests the film's internal affairs themes but does not reflect, at all, the dazzling, gorgeously imaged, complicated psychological drama. Don't be put off by it being Hong Kong police and mob styled action. It is in Mandarin with sub-titles and you do have to keep your eye and self on the ball – it is all worth it.

Styled by the visual consultant Christopher Doyle, who designed HERO, it is, as Gene Shalit would say, "A visual feast," or from Ed Koch, "How could a Chinese meal not be great?" And, too, there is a thick-as-thieves, double intrigue twisting plot of a gang soldier wheedling his way into the Hong Kong police force. He is Ming, portrayed by Andy Lau, and he has a really terrific performer, Anthony Leung, as Yan, his direct opposite of infiltration. Yan is a detective who's moled his way into the underworld as a gangster. Yan's chief superintendent has been on the trail of Ming's boss, a crazed mob leader. It is clear that all know that the dual identities will be unmasked. Death shimmers on the surface and muddy underground. Each day is a threat.

The split personalities of the two protagonists hang precariously, in a delicate double balance. The scales teeter on the breathless abyss of a wrong move as Ming and Yan churn with the turn coat confusion of who they really are. The leads, Leung, starring in HERO, and Hong Kong pop star Lau, depict their plight with the same deft, slicing professionalism as with their action scenes. These are not Benihana chefs. They cut deeply into the bone – the core – of emotion. Yan can't sleep and Ming's countenance is clouded. Their women voice the problems. The men themselves skirmish, thrust, circle and face each other in dance terms. It's a sensitive combat of grace and passion. Hong Kong action has taken on Ballet Theatre. I do not know to which of the two directors – Andrew Lau [no relation to Andy] and Alan Mak – to attribute what. However, I literally weep because Jerome Robbins isn't around to see this. His choreography of West Side Story was there in the beginning.

With minimal terseness, Infernal Affairs advances the genre "Hong Kong." The war of betrayal vs. loyalty takes on bigger issues. Ming and Yan curiously misfit together like Yin and Yang – two opposite forces that fit together like hand in glove. Two vastly different combusting powers that mesh together like the force of steam contained by another opposing force – Yin and Yang turn like the world. In the midst of the religious and ideological war in which we are being enveloped, Yan and Ming's confusion of good and evil reflects the halting hindrance of struggle while China, the ever-growing giant, expands larger and stronger and more sophisticated, as this film demonstrates. Like HERO, Infernal Affairs has taken ages to find distribution in this country. Are we lagging behind world interrelationships? Our country is a major influence in China and perhaps we might look to China as well. For instance, take a look at their movies. Excuse this film's title. It was most likely the distributor Miramax's cultural contribution.

MAYOR ED KOCH Goes To THE MOVIES

This is one of the worst films I've seen in years. Yet, it received very good reviews from most of the critics. The New York Times critic, Manohla Dargis, wrote, "The high-wire comedy I Heart Huckabees captures liberal-left despair with astonishingly good humor: it's Fahrenheit 9/11 for the screwball set. Chockablock with strange bedfellows – Dustin Hoffman and Lily Tomlin play a hot-and-heavy married couple, Jason Schwartzman gets his groove on with Isabelle Huppert – the film is a snort-out-loud master class of controlled chaos." Ridiculous.

I went with H.S., his son and the son's girlfriend. At the conclusion of the film when I got up from my seat in disgust, I asked my companions their views. The three of them said they liked it. I asked specifically why and what they liked about it. The son and the girlfriend said they couldn't provide reasons, they just did. H.S. said, "It was diverting to see seven major stars acting against type."

I don't agree with them. I think the film is a put-down of the audience by those who put it together and got so many stars to accept roles. Some will describe the film as a farce. A farce would, at least for me, carry humor past the reasonable and yet, with gross exaggeration, continue the fun, turning comedy to glee. This simply turned me off. The script gives the impression it is an attack on the environmentalists who oppose the construction of a giant supermarket department store in an area of forest and marshland. I didn't think they made brownie points for either vision. The three stars, Dustin Hoffman, Jude Law and Lily Tomlin, went with the flow and hugely exaggerated their roles, but believe me, there are no academy awards waiting for them.

The theater was packed and all shows for the evening (opening day) were sold out. There was even some applause at the conclusion of the film. In my judgment, the audience was guilty of mass hallucination. Stay home if this is your only choice for your evening on the town.

This is a road film involving two young men on their ways to epiphanies.

Biochemist Alberto Granado (Rodrigo de la Serna) and his medical student friend, Ernesto Guevara de la Serna (Gael Garcia Bernal) travel from Buenos Aires, Argentina, on an old broken down motorcycle to the Peruvian Amazon. Alberto is 29 and Ernesto, known as Fuser, is 23 years old. On the way they seduce young women and meet Ernesto's girlfriend, Chichina Ferreyra (Mia Maestro), and her family. They end up in a leper colony where both Ernesto and Alberto provide medical service to the colonists. They refuse to wear rubber gloves because they are told leprosy is not contagious when being treated, and they want the patients to see this as a sign of respect.

I enjoyed this idyllic story which covers one year in the life of Ernesto Guevara de la Serna, who later became known as Che Guevara. HG, who saw the film with me, did not like the film and referred to Che as a terrorist. I don't know if that is true. He was certainly a committed Communist, but that alone does not make him evil. Look at the respect Mikhail Gorbachev receives today. This movie involves no terrorism – the intentional killing of civilians in support of a political goal – so I accept it for what it is.

Not covered in this film is Che's later life. He took a leadership role with Castro in Cuba and became an inspiration to Communists and the radical left worldwide. Che eventually broke with Castro and was killed in Bolivia. Alberto Granado, now a very old man living in Cuba, appears on screen during the credit crawl at the end of the movie.

I think this film is superbly crafted and well worth your time.

theatre review: finer noble gases...by gordin & christiano

For almost the first hour of the New York premiere of Adam Rapp's dark comedy, Finer Noble Gases, directed by Michael Garces and presented by the Rattlestick Playwrights Theater, nothing much happens. Nothing in the way of dramatic action, that is, but what does transpire is quite real and ever so tedious.

Set in a grungy rundown apartment somewhere in what seems like New York's East Village, two stoned out musicians, Chase (Paul Sparks) and Staples (Robert Beitzel) sit on a sofa twitching and babbling non sequiturs while watching television and nodding out. The two rock band members apparently share the hovel with two other band members, Speed (Ray Rizzo), who spends almost the entire evening in a drugged stupor lying on the floor wearing nothing but dirty gray underwear, and Lynch (Michael Chernus), who comes in and out of the apartment intermittently.

One of the two highlights of the first hour occurs when Speed, in full frontal nudity, manages to awaken sufficiently to urinate into a drum. The live action urination on the night I saw the play was accomplished with two prolonged and forceful steady streams. Quite a feat, I imagine, considering the act is delivered right on cue, and it is not likely this particular skill is addressed in any acting class that I am aware of. The other is the dramatic moment when Lynch abruptly enters the apartment and unexpectedly kicks in the television, because it felt right. Chase and Staples are presented with a dilemma of what to do now, and the evening is given its major plot development. The two men devise a scheme to lure their downstairs neighbor Gray (Connor Barrett), an accountant, up to their apartment and for Chase to keep him occupied long enough so that Staples can steal his television by way of the adjacent fire escape.

Mr. Rapp is a prolific young playwright who has given us, amongst others, Nocturne, and the much praised Stone Cold Dead Serious, as well as the author of six novels. He is an immensely gifted writer with a talent for creating realistic dialogue and captivating characters. He has painted an authentic picture of these misfits, but who really cares about this crew of sad alienated losers? The playwright weaves a gripping spell, indeed, or a mood so to speak, but to what end, I'm not sure.

The press release indicates that this is an existential play and that the chemical term "finer noble gases" refers to gases that do not readily attach to other elements to form compounds. This metaphorically describes the lifeless characters of the play that are destroyed by their addiction to drugs, and their resulting inability to make a connection with any other living soul. Is their self destructive behavior symbolic for all the compulsive behaviors of our materialistic society in its decline? Is Mr. Rapp saying that if we fail to make meaningful connections, because we are lost in the pursuit of money, sex, power, food, drugs or the like, that we are no better than these drug-addicted young men? Or is it simply drugs are bad and you will sacrifice your life for them? What went wrong is not clear, so we are left to draw our own conclusions. The message, if one is intended, is lost. Maybe Mr. Rapp is not sure himself, but merely painting a vivid picture of these lost souls, and he himself will figure it out later. It doesn't matter, I guess, as Adam Rapp is a gifted playwright honing his skills and still finding his voice.

He is beautifully supported here by Mr. Garces' direction and an excellent cast of actors of which Paul Sparks is a standout. The seedy depiction is completed by the outstanding design team that includes sets by Van Santvoord, costumes by Elizabeth Hope Clancy, lighting by Ben Stanton and sound by Eric Shim. The play ends with a live performance by the Rock Band Less that leaves one to wonder whether the story was a flashback or a drug induced nightmare.

Finer Noble Gases is now playing at the Rattlestick Playwrights Theater 224 Waverly Place just west of Seventh Avenue between West 11th & Perry Streets on Tuesday through Sunday evenings @ 8 p.m. For tickets call SmartTix at 212-868-4444 orwww.smarttix.com

Entertainment In The Hamptons

Hamptons International Film Festival 2004

The 12th Hamptons International Film Festival is October 20 through 24, just 12 days away. HIFF is known in the film industry as a venue for new, thought-provoking independent films by new filmmakers from around the world – and HIFF audiences are film-savvy and receptive. This year, the Festival presents 30 world premieres and 18 U.S. premieres. The performers expected to attend and talk about their films are Drew Carey, Sally Kellerman, Anthony LaPaglia, Gena Rowlands, Kathleen Turner and George McGovern (!).

Working all year long, HIFF founders, its board, executive director and programmers have moved the Festival up in stature to a tier just below Sundance, Toronto and Cannes. In fact, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, the organization awarding the Oscars, has recognized HIFF as a qualifying venue for short films, so "shorts" presented here are eligible to win an Oscar.

HIFF films will be shown in East Hampton, Southampton, Sag Harbor and Montauk. HIFF is an umbrella under which many types of cinema are presented: new features and documentaries, films of conflict and resolution, feature and documentary short films, spotlight films (from well-known directors and casts, shown ahead of theatrical release), international (world) cinema, family films, films with Long Island connections, undergraduate and graduate student films, and, new this year, "Gray Matter" – named in memory of local resident, actor and monologuist Spalding Gray, these films are considered artistically innovative works.

The Festival opens Wednesday evening, October 20, with the East Coast premiere of Academy Award-winning director/screenwriter Bill Condon's Kinsey. With Liam Neeson as the controversial, ground-breaking human sex researcher Dr. Alfred Kinsey, the film has a stellar cast including Laura Linney, Chris O'Donnell, Peter Sarsgaard, Timothy Hutton, John Lithgow, Oliver Platt, and others. The closing night film is director/screenwriter Niels Mueller's The Assassination of Richard Nixon, based on a true incident, starring Sean Penn, Naomi Watts and Don Cheadle.

The dual goal of HIFF is to encourage and present new American independent films and filmmakers, and introduce a unique and varied spectrum of international films and filmmakers. Professional juries judge the films entered in competition, and valuable prizes are awarded. The largest prize is the Golden Starfish Feature Competition (for best narrative feature, its creators are awarded $180,000 in goods and in-kind services). Films competing this year are: director/producer Eddie O'Flaherty's Fighting Tommy Riley; actor/director Michael Goorjian's Illusion, writer/director Amanda Goodwin's Living 'til the End, writer/director Marty Sader's Most High, and writer/director/producer Debra Kirschner's The Tollbooth.

Films in the Golden Starfish Documentary competition, with $10,000 in cash and in-kind services awarded by sponsor Spike TV, are: Leslie Sullivan's Touch of Greatness; director/screenwriter Sarah Goodman's Army of One; director/screenwriter Ralph Arlyck's Following Sean; director/screenwriter/producer Fredric Golding's Hardwood Dreams; and Keith Beauchamp's The Untold Story of Emmett Louis Till.

The Golden Starfish International Film Competition ($10,000 prize) entrants are: Attila Janisch's sophisticated thriller After the Day Before (Hungary); George Misch's complex portrait of the stunning actress Calling Hedy Lamarr (Germany, Austria, England); Reza Bagher's bittersweet family tale Capricossa (Sweden); Valerie Guignabodet's charming tale of longterm love and loss Marriages (France), and Fridrick Thor Fridriksson's drama Niceland (Iceland). All five films have their U.S. premiere at HIFF.

Spotlight Films to be shown (opening in theaters over the next several months): Jonathan Glazer's Birth (Nicole Kidman, Lauren Bacall, Anne Heche); director/writer Dan Harris' Imaginary Heroes (Sigourney Weaver, Emile Hirsch, Jeff Daniels); director/screenwriter/producer/ cinematographer/editor Jonathan Nossier's documentary Mondovino (celebrates wine on three continents); director Stephen Vittoria's political memoir of George McGovern's presidential campaign One Bright Shining Moment, director Ken Kwapis' feature Sexual Life (Anne Heche, James LeGros, Elizabeth Banks, Dule Hill); director/screenwriter Mike Binder's Upside of Anger (Joan Allen, Kevin Costner); director/screenwriter Josh Sternfeld's Winter Solstice (Anthony LaPaglia, Allison Janney); and Xan Cassevetes' documentary Z Channel: A Magnificent Obsession.

The list of more than 100 full-length and short films to be shown in all HIFF categories is most impressive. The hardest thing for audiences will be to choose which film(s) to see because there is nothing banal or routine in any HIFF selection. For example, one of the films in the "conflict and resolution" category, The Angry Skies: A Cambodian Journey, features East Hampton doctor Blake Kerr, who has been conducting human-rights investigations in Asia on his "vacation" for 15 years – or screenwriter/director Vincent

Chakras – To The Core

Have you ever wanted to strangle your mother-in-law? Wanted to knock out the gangly fellow who has no concept of personal space on the subway? Think you need a pill or expensive shrink to curb your anger issues? Call it granola, but many people are finding inner peace by turning inward, balancing their centers of consciousness through a system of chakras to alleviate the common stress of everyday life.

Chakras are like little cosmic faucet handles that regulate the flow of energy through your body. Depending on how we react to certain situations, chakras allow more or less energy through your system. The faucets open and close when we decide what to think, what to feel, and how we are going to interpret life and the world around us. They are a network of nerves and sensory organs that interpret the outside physical world.

It may sound confusing, but the concept isn't hard to grasp. In fact, most of it makes sense if you can picture what's not physically there, what's not written in a biology book. If you take everything that you can feel, perceive, be aware of – everything that has to do with your state of consciousness – then divide all these things up, you will be left with seven distinct categories. These are chakras. The seven chakras are located along and in front of the backbone. Each has not only a part of the body that it associates with, but also an element, a color, and a sense.

Starting at the top of the head, chakra seven, also known as the crown chakra, deals with perceptions of unity and separation. It is depicted in a violet hue and allows a sense of empathy or understanding of another's situation. It represents a connection to our biological father, and our openness to authority and even God. This chakra's element is inner light, which is said to be what we experience when we are in the deepest part of our beings. When the Crown Chakra is closed, one may have feelings of isolation or loneliness.

Chakra six is the brow chakra and is located in the middle of the forehead. The brow chakra associates with sense and spirit. It connects the inner senses to the outer senses, with an element of inner sound that is not dependant or dictated by outside noise. It is the place where we find motivation, for brow chakra is where we manifest the actions we see in the outer world. It's represented by an indigo blue and is also known as the third eye, or Ajna.

The fifth chakra is sky blue and controls the throat, neck, arms and hands. Its sense is hearing and is said to fulfill one's goals by listening to intuition. It allows for communication, expressing and receiving.

In the middle of the chest in emerald green is the heart chakra. It allows us to love deeply, feel compassion, and have a deep sense of peace and centeredness. If you are having difficulty in breathing, or tightness in the chest, then there may be tension in your heart chakra. Additionally, if you are feeling uncomfortable when being touched, or when coming in physical contact with people, your heart chakra may be closed.

Notions of power and freedom are controlled by the third chakra, Solar Plexus. If you are comfortable in your skin, at ease with yourself and surroundings, this chakra is clear. Represented by the color yellow, its elements are fire and sun. It's concerned with ego and personality. Parallels can be drawn between the different aspects that this chakra represents. For example, if someone is sensitive about the sun, they may have particular sensitivities about power, control, or freedom.

The second to last chakra is in the abdomen, is orange, and affects your reproductive system and sense of appetite. Orange chakra is concerned with yearnings, innate wants and needs, whether for survival or pleasure. Inabilities to have children or weight issues are attributed here.

Finally, there is root chakra, a red chakra whose sense is smell. It affects teeth, bones, legs, feet and ankles. It allows you to be grounded, to have a sense of home amidst external chaos. Root chakra also represents a connection with your mother, be it biological or the Mother Earth. It's about how one feels about being here, grounded on this earth.

To heal is to bring all chakras into alignment and balance. One way to balance the seven chakras is through yoga or meditation, which innately allow for creativity, confidence, humility, and compassion. Through all of these elements comes a state of being that will nourish chakra and open energy fields.

The truth is anything is possible and anything can be healed. It is just a question of how to do it. If you're interested in learning more about the theories surround the seven chakras, turn your faucet handles out and venture to the Mandala Studio in East Hampton to let that energy flow.

Skin deep with Samantha Altea

Picture Perfect

Wish you could have flawless skin, perfect locks, sleek pert bodies and clothes that fit like a glove? You know, like Julia, Gwyneth, perhaps Beyonce? Ever open a magazine and dream of looking like the models found on every other page? Or do you yearn to resemble the movie stars and celebrities we all seem to hold in such high beauty regard as they meander down a bevy of red carpets? I mean, they're so gorgeous, flawless, unobtainable – they're perfect, aren't they?

Now, if you really believe that those we see in the public eye look as polished and perfect as they appear to be, here's a reality check. What you see is NOT what you get when it comes to most every celebrity you can think of. Every one of the icons of perfection we put on beauty pedestals are, in fact, big fat fakes!

Yes, Beyonce gets zits too, and Julia has to watch what she eats. The simple facts are that the glamorous world of fashion and celebrity is a world of smoke and mirrors. A world that doesn't really exist – It's an illusion. Not to say that this fantasyland isn't populated with some very attractive, even beautiful people. But if you think that any one of the people we see waltzing down any red carpet, or on the cover of a magazine, looks as stunning first thing in the morning, or when running out for a pint of milk, then get over it. It's simply not true. And just in case you do happen to catch a celeb en route for a cup o' sugar looking less than perfect – you know, the candid shots we all love to critique – then consider this, even then, when caught off guard, we're not seeing, for the most part, an image of the God given beauty that these people were born with. Not on your life. No, they've probably had the best dentist, who gave them gleaming pearly whites, a $1,000 hair cut and color, or even extensions; they may be sporting fake tans, expertly sculpted eyebrows, perhaps a little lipo here and there, some enhancements to face and body, ones that we'll never hear about, but that a very high percentage of celebs and the like take for granted – consisting of nose jobs, cheek implants, collagen, botox, breast implants...the list is endless. They likely have a personal chef who either cooks them specifically designed meals that will keep weight and bodies at a premium, or they may have meals delivered from the many places that offer this as a daily service. A personal trainer, and more to the point, big chunks of time allocated to daily workouts is part of a celebrity's life – it's their job. They get paid to look good and that takes time, energy, expert help and plenty o' work. The sweats that they just threw on, the ones that look great and you can't understand why you don't look as good in your sweats are probably high priced designer duds that, yes, would even flatter you; and last but not least, they likely have weekly facials, hair appointments, manicures, pedicures and dermatology appointments – one sign of a pimple and they'll have it injected by a pro so that it's banished from sight. So, when you do see one of those candid shots where a celebrity looks less than perfect, consider what they'd look like sans the list above.

It's time for us all to realize that the definition of beauty we all try so hard to achieve is an impossible task without a small army of perfectors and primpers who maintain and create the looks we mere flesh and blood are all trying so hard for. When you see stunning images in a magazine, or on TV, know that EVERY picture isn't perfect and has been airbrushed, and that the person in the shot has probably spent literally hours in make-up before hand. If make-up artists can create hideous monsters like those seen in Lord of The Rings, for example, what can they do to make people look beautiful...you do the math. Lighting works miracles, as do all the other tricks of the trade that go into making a professional photo shoot, or movie. Outfits are likely pinned and stuck in place so that they fit like a glove, (even down the red carpet). Sagging "bits" get the sticky tape lift treatment, too. It's quite normal for celebrities and models to literally lose pounds, wrinkles and much more with the touch of an airbrush button, where technicians can create bigger boobs, longer legs and shorter, more perfect noses, not to mention poutier lips. The same can be said of the big or small screen. Lighting and angles, hours of make-up and clothes fittings all go to create an illusion that we all love to buy into. But it's not real!

So the next time you flip through the pages of a magazine, or swoon at the big screen, wishing you, too, could look as perfect as the image you're seeing, take a moment and remember this. They may not be quite as perfect as they appear to be; some of them are just exactly like you and me!

Bringing Local Attention To Eating Disorders

Between 5 and 10 million individuals are affected with eating disorders every year. Whether we are aware of it or not, most of us have encountered eating disorders. It could be a friend, family member, coworker, or the driver of the car battling to pass you while you merge in morning traffic. You might even be suffering from one yourself, but never realized that there are others going through the same struggle with food and/or body image. Male or female, anyone at any point in his/her life can potentially develop an eating disorder.

Eating disorders such as anorexia, bulimia, and binging often lead to feelings of shame, embarrassment, and depression. Surrounding yourself with others that share the same kinds of feelings is the first important step when coping with an eating disorder. It is essential to get to the root of the problem to move forward with the healing process. When food becomes an obsession, it often leads to isolation. Alone, an eating disorder is almost impossible to overcome. If these dangerous habits are left untreated and ignored, some cases can eventually lead to death.

Gail Orenstein

Governor George E. Pataki signed legislation to establish comprehensive care centers to provide care plans for those suffering from bulimia, anorexia, and binge eating disorders. "Eating disorders are very serious and certainly can be life threatening in most cases," Governor Pataki said. "This law will take important steps to help those who are suffering from those diseases and ensure that New Yorkers get the quality health care they deserve and further ensure that our health care system is the best in the nation." Until June 21, 2004, New York had no system for comprehensive and integrated treatment of eating disorder patients. There was also no real form of education, prevention, or research of the all-too-common disease. Now, what Pataki has put in motion needs to be addressed at a more local level.

Gail Orenstein recently returned to the Hamptons from California, where she helped facilitate the opening of Puente de Vida, a new eating disorder facility. Helping those that are struggling with eating disorders has been the focus of her life. For 6 years, Gail worked for the Family Service League, running eating disorder support groups as well as meeting with people individually. Not only did she come back to New York to be close to her friends and family, but because she strongly feels that help is needed for those struggling to cope with eating disorders right here in our very own community. "The East End is a healing environment," Gail Orenstein said while speaking passionately about her cause. "People need time to reflect while they're in the healing process." Gail is also the co-founder of NoBody's Perfect, an awareness and prevention program that has been instituted at numerous public and private schools on the East End, including the Ross School in East Hampton. Recently, she has been in contact with author Ira M. Sacker, M.D who, along with Eating Disorders Specialist Marc A. Zimmer, PhD, wrote the book Dying to Be Thin: Understanding and Defeating Anorexia Nervosa and Bulimia – a Practical Lifesaving Guide.

Support groups and individual meetings are now being held at 2 locations on the East End, but that is just the start. Gail has been struggling to find help. Professionals such as psychiatrists, body image counselors, and nutritionists are needed to help run support groups, as well as to meet with people on an individual basis. Those that have experienced the problem first-hand are also ideal to give their time.

If you or someone you know is struggling to deal with an eating disorder, contact Gail Orenstein at 631-721-5226, or email gorensteinb@aol.com. Funding is also desperately needed, so any ideas or suggestions that you may have would be greatly appreciated. Becoming involved in the community around you is your choice, and even if you are unable to donate your own time or money to this ongoing problem, you may know someone who can.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Fall is an important time for gardeners with ponds. Ponds are particularly vulnerable to Fall weather. As leaves begin to drop, ponds begin to accumulate sludge from decaying plant debris and fallen leaves. These will throw off the ecological balance of ponds. Now is an important time to take special care to protect water and to prepare fish and plants for Winter.

Regardless of pond size, skimming leaves and debris off the water surface is critical to pond health and success. A heavy accumulation of leaves will clog pond filtration systems and increase the acidity level of water (especially oak leaves). For ponds too large to cover with deer netting, a fishing net or skimming device can be used to clean away leaves. Though it may take several times each week to manually clean away leaves and debris, the result is worth the effort. For smaller ponds, cover the pond using deer netting. It is easy to maintain, prevents leaves and other dying plant matter from getting in, and protects fish from rummaging herons and other animals that eat pond life. Because water temperatures drop in Fall, feed fish less as their metabolism slows. Fish that have been fed a high protein diet during Summer can be decreased to feeding once-a-day while water temperatures are still in the sixties. A wheat-germ based food is recommended because fish digest it easily. When water temperatures drop below 60 degrees, feed fish once or twice a week. As temperatures drop below 50 degrees, stop feeding fish until Spring. That said, we have found that the occasional handful of wheat-germ food during warm spells helps sustain fish through the toughest parts of Winter.

Filtration systems can be stopped in late Fall, after the first frost. At Rock Cottage, we prefer to keep the pond filtration system running throughout the Fall/Winter seasons. A floating pond heater (de-icer) helps keep water flowing at about 40 degrees. This supports fish survival and prevents the pond from over-icing. If you shut down the filtration system and do not use a de-icer, be sure to keep a small area of the pond open so toxic gases can escape. Breaking pond ice does not injure fish, as many think, and is necessary if fish are to survive. During late Fall/Winter, be careful about water flow since a high degree of water circulation can super chill water at the bottom of ponds by exposing it to freezing temperatures. This can lead to the death of the fish.

Feeding pond plants should have stopped in August. Now, as foliage on hardy plants dies back, remove dead and dying leaves and be sure plants are placed deep enough to keep roots from freezing. Remove tropical water lilies and other tender plants and place them in a tub filled with water in a sunny area in the home or greenhouse. Many tropicals will bloom all winter if given at least six hours of bright light each day. Taro and Calla lilies over-winter well in these conditions. We have found that water hyacinths and water lettuce require more care than they are worth. It is easier to discard them and replace them in the Spring. As an alternative to winter cultivation of tropicals, these plants can be stored well by washing off soil, wrapping them in damp newspaper, and placing them in a bucket of perlite or peat. Store plants in a cool, dark spot.

One beautiful addition to Winter ponds is the Water Hawthorne. This plant is one of the most fragrant, hardy water plants, and begins growing before others in Spring. It often blooms through the ice on Winter ponds and goes dormant in Summer. Similarly, it is recommended that oxygenating plants be kept in the bottom of ponds to provide some coverage for fish, and to provide food as fish feel the urge to eat. Now is an important time to add salt to ponds. Add salt at a rate of about two pounds per 100 gallons. Pond salt kills many common fish parasites. As water is added or changed during Winter/Spring, the salt will diminish. Adding salt helps bring fish through Winter because it improves gill function and helps fish maintain an adequate slime coat.

We have to admit that readying ponds for Winter is not our favorite chore. However, it is one of the more important tasks gardeners can undertake to ensure investments in equipment, plants, and fish are sustained. Just imagine how glorious the pond will look in Spring!

The Beauty And Versatility Of Bamboo

I walked through a bamboo rainforest, sunlight filtering through the leaves, illuminating the world a glowing green. The leader of my trip, a Thai man a head shorter than myself, saw the huffing and puffing of my cheeks as we ascended a hill. From his belt he whipped out a glistening machete and I paused with fear. He lifted his arm above his head and swiped the machete downward, with one motion decapitating a giant bamboo stalk. With another motion he removed the leaves. One more motion and the end became a sharp stake. Then he turned to face me and presented me with my bamboo walking stick, which would propel me through the forest.

Later that evening, our group curled up under bamboo thatched roofs set up around a fire burning bamboo. We cooked bamboo shoots in pots made of bamboo. We drank tea boiled in those bamboo pots out of bamboo mugs. In the morning, we awoke to see the sun rising, poking spears of light through our bamboo canopies.

It is one of the strongest, most versatile materials in the world. In Thailand, Bamboo is a boy's name. It is also the scaffolding that creeps up around buildings, comparable to steel in our country. Bamboo is used as a material to make paper, and as a material to make homes.

There is a suspension bridge that passes over a river in China. It is 750 feet long and nine feet wide. It is supported solely by bamboo cables fastened over the water. There is not a single nail or piece of iron in the bridge.

Typical bamboo has a tensile strength of 28,000 per square inch, as compared with a tensile strength of 23,000 for steel, which we often consider the strongest material. Bamboo is twice as stable as oak, and harder than walnut and teak.

Bamboo, strong as it is, is actually a type of grass. It varies in height from dwarf (one foot) to giant timber bamboos, that grow to one hundred feet. Bamboo, similar to aspen trees, grow in families. As I wandered through the bamboo rainforest in Northern Thailand, I noticed that the stalks grew as if huddling together, and then, a little further along the trail, another group huddled together. These bamboo clusters are connected, though. Bamboo can have two different types of roots systems, but in neither case is one stalk a sovereign plant. The first type of root system is called "clumping bamboo." These have a very short roots structure, and they grow slowly and densely. They make excellent barriers in a garden, though they will take years to develop. The second type of root structure is called "running bamboo." These send out underground runners, or rhizomes. This sometimes causes the next bamboo stalk to sprout out of the ground far from the parent plant. But just because the offspring strays doesn't change the fact that they are a family. Just like life, Mom and Dad.

Bamboo has been growing on this earth for an estimated 200 million years, and some varieties are the fastest growing plants on earth. Some bamboo can grow 18 inches in one day! With all its strength, though, bamboo is also flexible. After all, what doesn't bend breaks.

We always associate bamboo with Asia, but recently in the U.S., bamboo has become a popular form of décor. There are small bamboo clumps that you can buy on the streets in the city. One stalk is trained to grow around the other in a spiral, and it will continue to grow in this beautiful shape. Bamboo can also be used for gardening as an excellent screen to shelter your yard from the outside world.

But aesthetic value is not the only reason bamboo has made its long journey from the panda's mouth to our backyards. In 1882, Thomas Edison used bamboo as the filaments in the world's first light bulbs. The needle in Alexander Graham Bell's first phonograph was constructed of – what else – bamboo.

It is one of the most significant materials in the world, and its beauty and utility continue to astound. There is nothing like walking through a bamboo rainforest. But when I'm cruising down the back roads through the Hamptons, I smile every time I pass a cluster, no matter how small, of bamboo stalks filtering light onto American soil.

Who Let the Dog Out? Time for a Fence?

Do you need to keep deer out of your yard, or perhaps that nosy neighbor? Are you looking for a way to keep your pets or children in the yard? Do you want to mark the boundaries of your property, and believe that your dog's method of marking is a bit unseemly? If you have answered yes to any of these questions, you need a fence.

Until recently, the image of a fence that came to my mind was the typical, All-American white picket fence. The fence runs along the entire front of the house and continues along the side of the house, bringing to mind the blissful life of a husband named Trey, a wife named Bitsy, precisely 2.3 children, and friendly neighbors who chat from either side of the fence about the gauche people who just moved in across the street. That image sends me directly to the liquor cabinet, and I had long refused to consider having a fence. But several months ago, I had to confront my fears, because I had just installed a pool, and state and local law required me to put up a fence. As my pool is free-form and part of my backyard is completely natural, with thriving weeds, it was important to me to have fencing that would not get in the way of this non-manicured environment (as a white picket fence would).

I looked in the Yellow Pages and the classified ads of this paper, and decided to call Kingdom Fence, which is located in Bridgehampton, because I like supporting local businesses. The two owners of the business, Bob and Rob, came to my house with several portfolios of their fences. They were quite nice and informative, and I liked the fact that they do much of the work, as that ensures consistency in quality.

Right away, Rob and Bob assured me that there were options other than the white picket fence. I wanted to fence in the entire yard, not the just the pool. Because much of my property abuts woods, I was able to install that relatively inexpensive four-foot green wire fencing, which passes code. The great thing about this fencing is that it truly blends in with the woods. I was a doubter before it was installed, but I can tell you that almost every one of my guests this summer asked me if I have fencing in the woods. Next year, I plan to add on even less expensive eight-foot deer fencing, because I recently saw a deer jump over my pool fence the way I jump over a small puddle.

The two sides of the house presented an aesthetic question. I decided that I did not want a long fence running from the side of the house to the woods, but instead opted to extend the green, wire fencing for a bit from each side of the house and from the woods, and to place gates in between. I am planting flowering vines – clematis, rose, honey suckle – on the exposed fencing, so within a year or two, these fences will be virtually invisible underneath a sea of green leaves and, at times, colorful flowers. For the gates, I chose a very simple design made of red cedar and painted white. I rejected fancier, ornate gates, because, again, I prefer a simple, natural look.

The Kingdom Fence folks told me that most people who enclose an entire yard make choices similar to mine, although the style of the gates can differ tremendously. For those homes facing a street with a fair amount of car or pedestrian traffic, a picket or lattice fence is usually selected. Those fabulous mansions on streets like Gin Lane are blocked by privet hedges, and inside those hedges may be wire fencing—if the owners have a dog or pool. Fences constructed from wood are very popular. They are usually made of red cedar, either construction grade (which is knotty) or clear (like mine). Occasionally, gates are made from mahogany, if heavier wood makes aesthetic sense. Those wrought-iron fences are usually made of aluminum, and often are powder coated.

I was very impressed with the craftsmanship, dedication and professionalism of Rob and Bob at Kingdom fence. But whatever fence builders you select, you will have a great number of options from which to design the most aesthetically pleasing method you can imagine to keep the unwanted out and the wanted in.

Saving Stained Glass

After seeing the work that's been done on the windows of the Methodist Church in Southampton, I ventured out to Harvest Fest to pay Hallie Monroe, owner of Clear View Stained Glass Works, a visit and to pick her brain about the artistry of stained glass. Monroe was set up Saturday in an old barn at the Southampton Historical Museum, surrounded by artisans of all sorts, to educate visitors about their respective crafts. Across the way, a woman wove a blanket on an enormous wooden machine she operated with her feet. A man walked around the grounds and then into the barn to serenade us with his violin.

Monroe was backed by a wooden beam from which old horse spurs and whips hung off rusty nails. The light shone in and passed through the plates of her stained glass creations that hung from the rafters, spilling colorful light on the table in front of us. The thick slab of wood held one of the church's windows. The pinkish plum, turquoise and yellow glass panels were in pieces, clearly in the process of being restored. She laid the pieces out in the pattern of the original window and explained how the restoration process works.

Because some of these pieces date back to 1883, the combinations of pigments used in the original works are unknown. There is no machine, no special meter that can concoct the perfect mixture of pigment. To match the color perfectly, Monroe takes the old fashion approach of trial and error. She cuts up pieces of glass and, while taking careful notes, experiments with different colors and firing temperatures to match the originals. Once she has found the color, she applies the design with a stencil onto the glass. While the color and pattern are exact replicas of the original church windows, there is a difference in the newer versions. Unlike the older panels, these will not fade or change color over time. When the original windows were made, the paint used was mixed in the artist's studio, and the amount of flux added to the paint varied from mix to mix. This inconsistency made certain pieces fade and others not. Today's mixture has been perfected to withstand the test of time.

After the pieces are painted, they are fired. To get a high shine, the glass is fired at a higher temperature, and for a matte finish, a lower one. These particular pieces for the church are fired at about 1150 degrees, giving them a look that maintains the antiquity of the entire window. Once fired, the glass is fitted together with lead 'came,' a malleable substance that can be bent around any shape. Then, the seams are fitted with putty so that window is completely waterproof. This step is pivotal, for if water were to seep into the cracks and freeze, the window would warp and lose its structural integrity.

The task of taking on these windows is daunting. Monroe, however, has an extensive background, having not only studied at Pratt, but as an apprentice at Victoriana Glass Works. She was also an Assistant Art Director at Steuben Glass in Manhattan for years before moving out East with her husband. Monroe is inspired by her own thirst to explore new techniques, to experiment within the art form and take on different projects. I asked if she was worried about the future of her work, if advancements in technology have posed threats to her art. She wasn't. While glass companies can mass produce stained glass, the beauty and allure of the windows lies mostly in the work put into them, and the ornate and complex aspects from the individually hand crafted pieces. Buying and pricing stained glass pieces is tricky just for this reason. Very often, the value of a piece is sentimental. Stained glass lamps or window hangings are common items handed down through generations and often need to be cleaned or repaired. Depending on the intricacies of the piece and the time it will take to repair damage, the price will inevitably vary. Additionally, it's important to keep in mind that many antique stained glass works were made during a time where people weren't aware of the dangers of lead. While there are certain waivers for art stained glass, if you are looking to purchase an older stained glass piece, keep in mind that lead might have been used in the painting and/or fitting process.

While the time it will take to finish the project is still unknown, Monroe seems genuinely excited about the task. "One thing's for sure," she said with a smile. "I'll surely be on scaffolding in February." She's been working with stained glass since she was in high school. The daughter of two artists, she knew this was the direction her life would take. Not many can say they've followed a dream and succeeded. Although she'll be working on the church's windows for some time, her studio is open and located on Elm Street in Southampton.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

On the Market:

On the North Fork there are brokers that specialize in land. Syma Joffee Gerard sells farms and vineyards. A 64 acre vineyard in Southold that is currently listed with Ms.Gerard's office is forever protected agricultural land. Only 2 of the 64 acres have developmental rights intact. The property lies between the bay and sound. A percentage of the land is already planted with Merlot and Cabernet. Currently it is a vineyard, not a winery, but all the elements to make it a working winery are in place. It has a cottage that could serve as a tasting room. The two acres that are buildable have the potential for a vineyard to expand. The land is already subdivided into 2 pieces and can be sold separately. The first is 19 acres that is zoned strictly for agricultural use and the second is 43 acres, 2 of which permit development. The land, grapes and cottage are listed for $3.5 million dollars. Ms. Gerard told me that she works hard to find buyers that are preservation-minded.

Also, 26 acres near the sound in Cutchogue, whose development rights were purchased not too long ago by the Peconic Land Trust to prevent development, has just come back on the market. Twenty-four of these acres are now protected land, with only two remaining for development. It is located in the area of Oregon Road, one that contains some of the most pristine farmlands on the North Fork and is another prime parcel ideal to house a working farm or vineyard. The asking price is $1.1 million. It is adjacent to one more 12.7 acre piece, also for sale, with 2-acre zoning. This would allow a maximum of 6 homes to be built on the piece of land that backs acres of protected and preserved land.

In Water Mill, South, is a 6000 sq ft French Villa nearby to the ocean and Mecox Bay. It has 7 bedrooms and 7.5 baths, marble and hardwood floors, a 20 x 40 heated gunite pool, library and sunroom. The home is on 2.3 acres and is listed with Brown Harris Stevens in Southampton for $4,900,000.

The Numbers:

Colloden, Colloden Point and the Leisuramas.

By 1964 approximately 250 Leisurama homes were built in Montauk. The homes were showcased in Macy's in New York and would come equipped with everything down to the pots and pans. They were meant to be the affordable answer to the second or vacation home. There were three models that started at $8,500 and went up to $12,500. The smallest was a studio cottage with a murphy bed. The homes were built up off the LI sound directly west of the Montauk Harbor in a private beach community. Today, those very same homes range from $575,000 on the low end to $700,000 + on the higher end. Rick Webowsky of Remington Realty in Montauk, who currently lists and sells these homes, says that the original idea was much like the plan of the Levitt homes up the island. The area, now Colloden Shores, has a combination of homes remodeled, enlarged and rebuilt. He has one right now, an exclusive with his office at $700,000. It is a 5 bedroom with an oversized garage, fireplace & wood burning stove, near the water. Mr. Werbowsky shared that he had a strong season where prices hold steady or rise, and says, " I keep expecting the market to level off, but it just doesn't."

Adjacent to Colloden is Colloden Point, a fairly new subdivision that was years in the making. It consists of 54 lots with 2 acre zoning, all of which by now have been sold or resold. A current listing in Colloden Point is on the market for $2.5 million with Remington Realty. It is a 5000 sq ft traditional shingle style with 5 bedrooms and 4.5 baths with an excellent bay view. Some of the Colloden Point parcels have not yet been built on.

BLENHEIM PALACE OR HARBES FARM?
Dear Dan,

I thought you could have some fun with this. Please come get lost if you're interested :

THE "ROLEX OF MAZES" OPENS IN JAMESPORT, L.I. What does Harbes Family Farm, on the North Fork of Long Island, have in common with Blenheim Palace in England or Leeds Castle in Scotland? All three offer visitors a chance to experience the thrill of getting lost-and found-in mazes designed by the British "mad genius of mazes," Adrian Fisher. Winner of six Guiness World Records for maze design, Fisher promises that all of his mazes are unique, and none are in proximity to each other.

The Harbes Family introduced Long Island's first corn maze in 1995, and has added extra features every year to keep it Long Island's best. Three of the Harbes eight children have carved the maze themselves, a secret process involving abstruse mathematics, cans of spray paint, and a lot of hoeing. It is gigantic in size, covering eight acres and featuring three bridges and a tower, where a maze master with a bird's eye view guides the fun, assisted by actors who play out the maze's theme of "Westward Bound."

Families who enter the wagon wheel -shaped maze are asked to search for an imaginary pioneer family's lost possessions. When they have found Pa's wheel, Ma's butter churn (essential for roasted corn), Sis's corn doll and Boy's rocking horse (so he can become a cowboy), and they are awarded genuine Harbes "Gold" Piece. Along with the fun of matching wits with the labyrinth's design, visitors

To the farm can also eat freshly roasted Supersweet corn, pick pumpkins, buy local flowers and produce, go for pony rides or hay rides, listen to live music, and enjoy the Good Ole Days of autumn on the North Fork.

The maze is located on Route 25 in Jamesport. It is open weekends from 9a.m. to 6 p.m. (last entry at 5 p.m.) through October 31. For information, call 631-722-2022, or visit www.harbesfamily-farm.com online.

Dear Dan,

I read your @#& article and just had to laugh.

If the Town of East Hampton would permit Cross Sound Ferry to run a boat from the South Fork you could have left your home at 9:15.

Just think of all the lost hours incurred by the people going to and coming from New England to and from the South Fork.

It really would be best for everyone to have a ferry terminal in East Hampton.

What do you think?

Sincerely,

D. H. Fleming
Orient

I like going across Shelter Island on the ferries. –D.R.

WAR AND PEACE
Dear Dan,

I just had to write to you. I just read your son David's tirade about our President Bush.

The trouble is that we do not hear or read much against this so-called President. I do not understand why more people do not speak about all the trouble we have now that is in Iraq. More than 1,000 troops have been killed to date and of course we are going to read about much more of our people being killed by the killers in Iraq.

I am a GI from WW2. I was in the 38th Cavalry Recon. Sq. Mecz. Our job was to go and find out where the Nazis were located so that we could have troops take care of them. The jobs went to the young men who were sent to us. I was a Supply Sgt. and I still remember the eighty men that we lost to the enemy.

You tell your son David that he hit it right on the nail. We have no business being in Iraq. We should get out of there with our troops right now.

Tell him to keep up writing about the so called president we have in Washington and what he does to bring about more of our young men being killed there.

All the best to you and your paper.

David A. Levine
Wesbury

I hope all this resolves soon. –D.R.

WELL DONE
Dear Lise,

Thank you so very much for mentioning the Christopher Reeve Paralysis Foundation's Gala in the South of the Highway column. Everyone reads it and we have gotten a lot of positive comments.

The Christopher Reeve Paralysis Foundation is unique in its ability to move beyond money and politics to unite scientists and doctors from all over the world and build hope for the millions of people suffering with spinal cord injury. Your mention means everything to the people who will ultimately be affected.

Thanks again.

Police Blotter

Robbing Rat Pack Have Much In Commons. According to Southampton Town Police reports, an investigation conducted with the New York City Police Department's South American Intelligence Division hit pay dirt. Four individuals were arrested for stealing merchandise from several retailers at Bridgehampton Commons on Route 27. The investigation revealed that the quartet met in Queens earlier in the day and laid plans for their heist. Why the Commons was selected is unclear. While authorities would not reveal which stores were robbed, they did recover over $10,300 in merchandise. Each of the bandits was charged with multiple counts of grand larceny.

Pros and Cons of Good Credit. A resident of East Hampton Town was contacted by The Home Depot for defaulting on her credit card. The only snafu... she had never applied for the card. It appears her identity was "stolen" as well as over $6,000 in merchandise from the store.

* * *

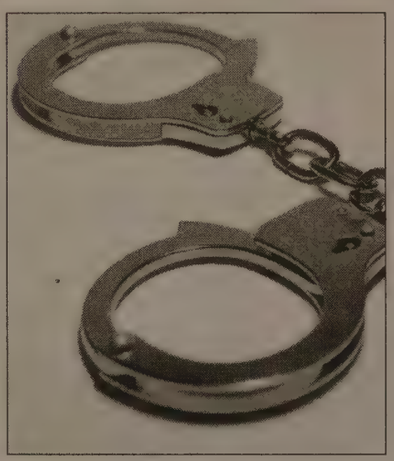
Bushwackers Strike Again. A member of the Old Orchard Property Association reported that about $900 in bushes was stolen from the center island at the Old Orchard and Hand's Creek Road intersection.

* * *

Sticky Little Fingers. It must be a sign of the times, when a dangly blue handicapped parking permit captures a thief's attention. According to East Hampton Village Police reports, such a permit was nabbed from a car parked in the Waldbaum's parking lot on Newtown Lane.

* * *

Creating Quite The Rake-ous In Montauk! While it is true that fall is upon us, it appears leaves weren't what this offending rake was used for. An unknown assailant meted out a few blows in answer to fisticuffs that broke out inside the Lakeside Inn before moving outdoors into the parking lot. Two men were on the receiving end and sustained various cuts and bruises. Whether from imbibing or getting conked on the head, neither was able to identify their attacker.



* * *

Shots Heard 'Round Redwood Road. According to Southampton Police reports, two different residents on Redwood Road and Havens Lane in Sag Harbor called in to report gun shots being fired in the neighborhood. Authorities responding to the call were unable to find any suspects.

* * *

The Case of the Missing Cases Rouse Suspicions. The proprietor of Franey Wines and Liquors on Springs-Fireplace Road allegedly saw someone holding a $150 case of Svedka vodka when she was turning on the alarm system. When she arrived at the store the next day, the case had indeed vanished; however, she was able to identify the liquor looter to authorities. In Amagansett at Atlantic Wines and Liquors, the owner there reported a case of wine valued at $192 was stolen from the store.

* * *

Ahoy Matey, Boating Bonanza Nets Purse Pirate Cold Hard Cash! According to police reports, a bag left on a boat at Three Mile Harbor Marina in East Hampton caught the roving eye of a thief. Apparently the bag was left on the boat unattended for a short while. When the owner returned to claim it...the purse, which contained $800 in cash among other items, was gone.

One Can Only Hope Chivalry Isn't Dead. According to Southampton Town Police reports, a Water Mill woman filed a complaint against an individual she believed violated a court order of protection. Apparently, this surly individual made several threatening phone calls, claiming he was "not in jail yet" and that he was "going to get her."
